NEWBERG GRAPHIC.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY MORNING.

E. H. WOODWARD.
EDITOR and PUBLISHER.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1890.

Entered as second class matter at the post office at Newberg, Oregon.

THE Newberg exhibit at the Portland exposition is first class and a credit to Yamhill county.

WHEN individuals undertake to look after matters that concern others, it is safe to conclude that they have no business of their own to look after, or else if they have they are sadly neglecting to attend to it.

NEWBERG had to furnish the exhibit to represent Yamhill county at the exposition. It is probably just as well though that the fruits, vegetables &c. were gathered here as this of all places in the country can show such products of the soil as are calculated to open the blind eyes of visitors from the Mississippi valley. Another tally for Newberg.

IT is the custom of the publishers of different papers througout the country to send agents to the surrounding towns and offer to give a write up of each place, if interested parties will furnish a certain number of subscribers and agree to take a few hundred extra copies of the paper containing the puff. The desired number is usually found and in due time the puff appears bristling with immense head lines and strung out at great length, and slopping over with gush, which convinces the eastern reader at once, if he has ordinary "gumption" that the write up is paid for and that the author was compelled to say something "goody, goody" if he said anything at all. The possibilities of a locality are not sized up by the reading of this class of stuff, but people at a distance like to read the local paper which notes the every day doings of the citizens of a town and the surrounding community. The same amount of money spent in sending the home paper away would be the cause of bringing more people of the class that any town ought to want, than this class of stuff that is paid for by the square yard.

THE fair held here recently was one of the best ever held at Newberg and many from other parts of the county say it was the best ever held in Yamhill county. Be that as it may the fair was a success, and was conducted in a way to reflect credit on Mr. Cooper the president, the superintendents of departments and all who assisted in any way to make a good showing. The display was good in most all the departments which made the fair one of the best advertisements for Chehalem valley that could be gotten up. People who live at a distance from here seemed to appreciate the exhibit fully as much as our own people, and many were the expressions of satisfaction heard on every hand. Many were heard to say that they always like to come to Newberg fair as they are sure to have such a pleasant time, and as long as the fair is conducted in a way to make a pleasant and enjoyable time for all, our efforts will be appreciated. The fair was started from a very small beginning but has steadily increased in size and interest, until we believe that those who were slow to see any good to come from it, begin to see the importance of keeping it up and making more of it from year to year. A new location will have to be chosen for another year and the proper thing to do, is to secure a good location on grounds that can be held permanently for this purpose. If grounds can be secured near enough to town to be used for a public park and picnic purposes, as well as for fair grounds this would be a good plan. A call is made for a meeting to consider what is best to do and everybody ought to take an active interest in the matter as it is one of vital importance to the prosperity of the community.

Fair Meeting.

Everybody interested in keeping up a good fair at Newberg read this notice and come out to the meeting Saturday Oct. 18th. at 2 p. m. at Friends church. Arrangements will have to be made for new grounds and the subject of organizing a permanent organization will be considered. Business of importance will be transacted and everybody should come out.

The Reason We Are Yamhillers.

Strangers very often ask how this country came to be called Yamhill, and a variety of answers are given to the question. The question has been raised lately and a discussion is now going on among the newspapers. Considering the fact that all the great men in Oregon got their start in Yamhill the question is quite important. Hon. John Minto of Salem an old resident of the state has this to say in regard to the vexed question.

"It is assumed that the small mounds found near the sites of Indian villages suggested the name to the early settlers by the resemblance which these small mounds have to sweet potatoe hills. The writer believes that the assumption is wrong. All information as to the cause of these little mounds connects them with the social condition of the natives of this entire valley of the Willamette. Womanhood was rated here just as slaves were rated in the cotton and cane districts of the Southern states when the first home builders located in Oregon. The staple food crop of the Indians here was the camas root. The labor of gathering it devolved upon the female side of the Indian family. It was prepared for use in earth ovens, much like the preparation of burning charcoal, the construction when in operation being a conical mound about three and a half feet high and from four to six feet across the base. When the Indian girl desired to publish that she was in the matrimonial market, ready for sale by the nearest of kin, she could dig for camas by constructing a mound of earth of the shape described. It was her way of letting her physical development be known, and answered the purpose as well as if she had changed from short to long dresses. There was, in an early day several rows of such mounds within the present limits of Salem, and the last new mound which the writer observed was near the east end of the 'Agricultural works' building. When these mounds settled down and ran together, so to speak, it would be more easy to ascribe the construction as intended for defensive breastworks. The name came from the local tribe of Indians who inhabited the locality—'Yam-it.' As early as 1845 the writer heard natives of the district covered by Yamhill county repeatedly use the word "Yam-it" as the name of their people, while they would scornfully reject the name "Calipooia."—Oregonian,

New England Letter.

ORANGE MASS.,
Sept. 25th. 1890.

ED. GRAPHIC:

Although a little slow in complying with your request I will try this morning to write you a few lines that may be of some interest to some of the readers of the GRAPHIC. I will say here that I am no writer as I know you will find this brief letter will show but excuses are of no avail and I will begin.

After leaving our good old state of Oregon I find as all who have traveled over the plains a terribly dry dusty trip until I reach Denver. Some of the scenery along the Denver and Rio Grand road I cannot speak too highly of as it for grandure is pretty hard to surpass.

After leaving Denver we begin to see a better country which grows all better as you go east to the Missouri river. Western Kansas and Nebraska I find to be nearly a failure in corn and in the eastern part of the state about ½ crop. Farmers say they make about the same each year whether failure or not and some have good courage. They say total failure of course no money and if all have good crops can't sell their produce so it finds them in the same fix. All appear to be happy. I also found in the southern part of Ill., Ind. and Ohio a very short crop of corn and as corn is the main crop of the western states I could not see much money for the farmer there.

I find a better state of things among the eastern farmers as regards looks of places are concerned from Cincinnati eastward.

I passed Harpers Ferry on the B. & O. and saw John Brown's old fort of war times and at once thought of our John. Had many places pointed out to me by G. A.R. men on the train where they took part during the late war, from Cumberland towards Washington.

I also visited my native state (Vermont) and find all the farmers grumbling about hard times, but I can see that they that have their farms clear from debt are having a pretty good time attending all shows, excursions and fairs that come along. No wonder they don't make money where one fourth of there time is spent on the road beside some money.

I find many changes in places I once lived in but time of course makes great changes among us all. I find but few places that have had a better or as good a growth as has our Oregon towns and I now can hold up both hands in favor of Newberg as being a place hard to beat considering its advantages as well as all things else. If we all push together we can have a town of 2500 population in Newberg inside of a few years and not have very hard work on our hands either. We have the soil and climate and if we only had some of the eastern R Rs. instead of our little N. G. we could not complain, but of course we will soon have a better road we all know.

After carefully considering the places I have visited I can safely say that the future for the Willamette valley and especially that portion easy of access to Portland is in the near future in my estimation destined to make a wonderful change for the better.

Trusting I am not occupying too much of your valuable space with this article I will close hoping soon to be with you all, I am,

Yours truly,
A. P. OLIVER.

Old Yamhill's Exhibit.

THE MAGNIFICENT DISPLAY MADE AT THE EXPOSITION.

Newberg Comes to the Front.

What the Region of the "Big Red Apples" Can Do—The Fruits and Vegetables Challenge Admiration.

Yamhill county has been known ever since Oregon was known as the par excellence of "big red apples" and of everything else that grows in the ground or comes out of it, in these latitudes, that is good to eat. For some reason Yamhill county, as an entity, did not send an exhibit to the great Exposition, but the citizens of Newberg, a comparatively recent development of that region, came to the front with a display which fitly typifies the county.

Newberg is an exemplificaiton of what can be accomplished in the now waste places of Oregon by the exercises of intelligent industry and energy. Ten years ago Chehalem valley, in which it is located, was known as the "grubby end" of Yamhill county. Scrub oaks and chaparal were the principal products of the soil, and nomadic herds of cattle and bands of sheep the living tenents at will of the whole region. To-day there is a thriving town of 700 inhabitants, noted for the quiet, orderly and progressive character of its population, about one-third of whom are Quakers, supporting an excellent Academy, rapidly developing into a college. In the valley proper, there are from 1500 to 2000 people including those in the town. The town proper was founded in 1876 by Mr. William Hobson, who was a pioneer of Iowa in 1851. In the fall of '76 settlers commenced the work of reclaimieg the waste places. There are now one thousand acres planted to fruit. The output of the wheat fields this year amounts to about 60,000 bushels. Oats and barley are extensively cultivated, large hop fields are set out and dairying is becoming a prominent feature of its many industries.

The Newberg exhibition is intensely interesting as an object lesson in the noble work of bringing the great state of Oregon up to its true productive capacity, and it is probable that Newberg presents as good a field for the practical study of this question, as any section of the state does. It needs, it is true, a personal inspection of this display to enable anyone to fully realize how much has been done in order to enable a newly-settled region to make such an attractive display.

THE APPLE DISPLAY.

Here, as the leading feature of the display, apples are to be seen—forty varieties of this staple fruit—including all the varieties heretofore named in the reports of the Wasco and Benton county exhibits, besides the Red Bitterman, Jo Withen, Red June, Mother Apple, Sweet Summer, Indiana Favorite and other unnamed species and Siberian crab-apples, which for beauty of shape and color are "a sight to behold," and a pleasant sight at that.

THE PEARS.

The display of pears embraces Winter Nellis (very fine), Prince Albert, Bartlett (very large, perfect and beautiful), Pound, Vicar, Fall Butter, Beurre Fargo, Beurre d'Angran, Keifer, Flemish Beauty, d'Angouleme, Louisa, Bonney, d'Jerse Beurre d'Easter, Seckel, Sheldon and an unnamed variety.

EXHIBIT OF PEACHES.

Peaches do well in the Newberg region. Among the early varieties Crawford's and Hale's Early and the Golden Cling are the favorites and successfully grown. The exhibit now on the Newberg tables comprises eight late sec llings, unnamed.

QUINCES.

The quinces in the exhibit are large, well formed and attractive, and will easily average a pound in weight each.

APRICOTS.

The exhibitor in charge assures the reporter that the Moor Park apricot attains perfection, and is a prolific bearer, ripening in Newberg and vicinity about the middle of summer. A very valuable seedling apricot, originating in Newberg, is now being developed by the founder of the town.

GRAPES.

Good exhibits are made of Isabella and white Muscadines, so called, probably it should be white Muscatels.

DRIED FRUITS.

The exhibit of dried fruits is limited in quantity, but attractive in appearance, comprising Petites and Gros d'Arysan silver and Italian prunes, egg plums and apples. The fruit is well cured and handsomely boxed.

VEGETABLES.

Hubbard squashes, beets, cabbage, carrots, wurtzel, potatoes and corn make up the display of vegetables. The corn comprises Flint (yellow dent), sugar, pop, and Mexican variegated, a variety the writer has not seen since thirty years ago he ate tortillas made from the same by the senoritas on the "sandy banks of the Rio Grande." The man hunting for a pork-raising locality, after seeing this corn would have no fears of a lack of fat bardening food in that section.—Oregonian.
