We get the information from a reliable source that Gen. H. B. Compson, of Portland will be a candidate before the democratic state convention for the office of governor. The party cannot, in our opinion, select a better or more popular man for gubernatorial honors than General Compson; he is a man conservative, honest and conscientious in his political views, a friend to the laborer and all political reforms that tends to ameliorate the present condition of labor and capital. His political status together with his general popularity makes him a very available candidate.

Thanksgiving was generally observed in our town and county, many good dinners and kindly greetingswere interchanged and few if any of our citizens are too poor in this world's goods to deny themselves the little extras and luxuries indulged in on such occasions, a condition that we should be truly thankful for in this isolated country. How different it is in the crowded districts of our nation in the thronged marts and cities where thousands eke out a meagre existence with little or no hope for the morrow or future prosperity. In this land of freedom and plenty, if proper laws were enacted and administered, want would not be known in any household, misery would not be felt in this broad and great country where every one should have an equal showing in the fight for supremacy, and not handicapped by moneyed corporations and syndicates.

W. B. Johnson and Bob Williams are poorer by four or five pigs this morning than they were last night. Now the case of the pigs is somewhat mixed and isn't mixed either, that is, in the first place there was no mix, but gradually took on that state. Bob was told by a friend and an interested party that one of our citizens, living near town, had some pigs to dispose of. Now these four footed animals that squeal every time they see you and grunt when too full to squeal are rather a scarce article in this county at this time, and Bob, instead of taking this interested friend into the purchasing part of the pigs, gets W. B. Johnson, comes a distance of about 35 miles, buys the pigs and stops here over night on their way home. Thinking the little porkers were properly secured for the night they went to bed happy and contented and dreamed of pigs, fat hogs and well cured bacon. This morning upon going out to look after the pigs, none were visible. It so happened the interested party was in town last night, so our readers can see plainly that the pigs or the men or both are getting mixed.
