DEEPER IN CELLAR

Oakland Victory Forces Portland Down.

GAME LOST IN TWO INNINGS

Commuters Fall Upon Butler for Seven Hits and Seven Runs in First Minutes of Play.

'Twas the same old story, so why go into detail to tell it? It took Lohman's Commuters just two innings to win the game and place it in cold storage. Ike Butler faced the Californians and the bingle-fest began with Ganley, the first man to face him. Three other singles followed, which, coupled with bad throws by both Butler and Kirby Drennan, gave Oakland three runs. Ely's Clerks went out in order and it was ripe for Oakland's cond killing.

Devereaux, whose funmaking kept the crowd from quitting the game early in the session, was exened in the second inning and for one brief spell it looked as if Butler's usual bad inning was over. But it wasn't, for His Wrinkles, Peter Lohman, slashed out a single, and the old ampaigner romped to second when Beck failed to trap Schmidt's grassburner. This was the beginning of a bundle of baseball pyrotechnics, and when the celebration was over the Commuters had chased four nore runs over the pan. Lohman and Schmidt were dancing on the sacks. Ganley could do nothing better than fly out to Castro. Francis made a mess Franck's attempt to murder the ball, and this misplay allowed Lohman to reach third. Kruger, who is clouting the ball on the nose, rapped out a single, sending in both Lohman and Schmidt.

This should have been enough, but Doc Moskiman, who had just relieved Oscar Graham in the left garden, bumped a Butler offering for two sacks. Francks scored and in the general melee and confusion Kruger, who had broken the rec ord on touching corners, sneaked past Steelman, scoring the fourth run. Steel-man must have forgotten that Kruger made the third man on bases, for when Oom Paul stole swiftly behind him and touched the plate, Portland's backstop was striving madly in order to keep Mos-kiman at second. The handful of fans were blue on the outside from the cold, but when they saw the Oakland German successfully pull off that theft at the plate they became blue within. Murphy, who made his initial bow to local spectators by taking Nadeau's station, got as far as third, after he had stopped one of Schmidt's curves with his insanity bump. Ike Francis' single put him there, but it counted for nothing, because two were already down, and Steel-man fouled out to Devereaux.

Portland's half of the third inning was yet to come. Butler, determined to yet to come. Butler, determined to get back some of his lost glory, singled, but Drennan, who had a disastrous day, was an easy out. McCreedle placed a clean single to left and Butler scored.

Butterlos—McGinnity and W. an easy cut. McCreedle placed a clean single to left and Butler scored when Freeman hit into safe territory. Then came the mighty Castro, with his long black bat, and he cleaned the sacks with a two-bagger that was a pippin. Murphy got down on an error by Francks. He stole second, but neither Beck nor Fran-cis could connect safely, and the last chance to score passed into history. That big, husky Schmidt—don't you fans which he was on Portland's payroll-closed up like a kid's pocket-knife. Mc-Creedie was the only Clerk to find him after that linning, and that long bingle came in the fifth. After that it was a case of one, two, three and back to the field with the locals: The score: PORTLAND.

moves yet made. There is no question but that the continued losing streak which befell the team down south had a tendency to disorganize it; then when Ely took sick the balloon went up proper. The team was in a bad way without a guiding hand, and then when it returned home, the stories began to float around. For the most part they were one-sided, because Mannger Ely was too ill to tell because Manager Ely was too ill to tell because Manager Ely was too ill to tell his side, and the natural sequence was that rumors of a change of management were scattered broadcast. The persistency of this rumor was based upon the story that Ely's illness was so serious that it would be impossible for him again to assume control of the team.
