PUBLISHERS AND PROPRIETORS.

NEWSPAPER LAWS.

1. A postmaster is required to give notice by letter (returning the paper does not answer the law), when a subscriber does not take his paper out of the office, and the reason for it is not being taken. Any neglect to do so makes the postmaster responsible to the publisher for payment.

2. If any person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay all arrearages, or the Publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount whether it is taken from the office or not. There can be no legal discontinuance till payment is made.

3. Any person who takes a paper from the postoffice, whether directed to his name or another, or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the pay.

4. If a subscriber orders his paper stopped at a certain time, and the publisher continues to send, the subscriber is bound to pay for it if he takes it out of the postoffice. This proceeds on the ground that a man must pay for what he uses.

5. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the post office, or leaving them uncalled for, without paying for the same, is prima facia evidence of intentional fraud.

A Paris correspondent says Count Herbert Bismark is conspiring to obstruct Emperor William's policy. —Ex.

Emperor William has informed Prince Bismark that if he does not stop his press utterings the result will be serious.—Ex.

The World's Fair at Chicago expects to have the sarcophagus of Cleopatra and the mummy of Rameses on exhibition. It is claimed that in Cæsar's camp, near Alexandria, the Cleopatra sarcophagus was recently found.—Ex.

The reports that Mexico is over run by Chinese is sheer nonsense. There are not 1000 Chinamen on the entire coast. The majority of these are arrivals, simply passing through here on their way to the United States.—Ex.

Pugilistic John L. Sullivan next season will be a star in a drama which Duncan G. Harrison is writing for him. The play will be replete with exciting situation and climaxes A prize-fight will be a feature.—Ex.

The White Star steamship Doric, trading between London and New Zealand, claims to have made the fastest voyage around the world The total time is 77 days 6 hours 50 minutes, the distance being 28-000 miles. The engines worked continuously. There was no slowing or stopping.

In a suit against the Southern Pacific Company, brought by Mrs. Emma Miller, widow of Engineer Miller, who was killed in a railroad accident, near Albany, about a year ago, the jury awarded the plaintiff $5000 damages. The administrator of the estate of Clino Guthrie, a fireman who lost his life in the same accident, was also awarded damages in the sum of $3000.

The emigration of Mormons from Utah into the Seirra Madres, has been large doing the last six months. At Juarz there are seventy families, at Corvallis and Cove valley twenty families each. The Mexicans give much encouragment to Mormon colonies, as they will aid in destroying the Apaches, and are raipdly developing the agricultural resources of the state—Ex.

Victor Boulet, a poor workman at Keenville, N. Y., has made a lucky find. The path from his house to the gate had worn down so that some stones in it became troublesome. One morning he took a crowbar and began prying them up. He found that they were cobble-stones that had been driven into the ground, forming a circle. Beneath them was a large flat stone. His curiosity was excited, and he pried up the latter, when he discovered beneath it a black kettle full of money, but whether gold or silver is not stated.—Ex.

The New Republic.

United States Marshal George E. Gard arrived at San Diego, June 13, from Ensenanda, where he has been making investigations of the filibustering movement, which was recently exposed. During his investigation a copy of the provisional constitution of the new republic, which the filibusters expected to form, was secured and this document has been forwarded to Washington. The constitution assert political from the United States and Mexico, and declares that the people hereby delegate their authority to a council of administration for the purpose of a war of independence, and that the authority of said council shall be declared when a constitutional convention of the people shall be called. All legislative functions are vested in said council and until the declaration of peace martial law should prevail on the peninsula. The writ of habeas corpus is declared suspended during the war for independence. The president was to preside at all meetings of the council, and have the deciding vote.—Ex.

Only one Escaped

The massacre by a band of renegade Cheyenne Indians of Chief Engineer William L. Critteden, in charge of the third division of the Government survey in Wyomoming, together with three of his men, was reported in Denver, June 5th, by J. H. Holt, Purchasing Agent for the Importing Company, who had just arrived from the scene of trouble.

The terrible butcher occurred in the Upper Green river country, and resulted in the death of Chief Engineer W. L. Critteden, E. W. Timberlake, Geo. Woods and Henry Evermyer, chain-carriers, and the serious if not fatal wounding of Assistant Engineer Jesse Lee.

Eleven Cheyenne Indians rode into the surveying camp, but nothing was thought of such a common occurrence, and they were given a kindly welcome. It was soon discovered, however, that the Indians were intoxicated and disposed to be ugly. They demanded liquor of the surveyors, which was of course refused. The Indians then commenced to drink from flasks, which they brought with them, at the same time inviting the men to join with them in their orgie. The men again refused and the Indians became boisterous and threatening and finding out that they could not get whisky began to demand sugar, coffee, etc., and were again refused.

Then began finally to make threats and was ordered from camp. A quarrel then ensued, when the Indians suddenly attacked the surveying party with knives and guns. The attack was so sudden and unexpected that the men were not prepared for resistance, and when the Indians departed all five men were left on the field for dead Assistant Engineer Lee was not killed, however, and revived sufficiently to drag himself to the nearest ranch, where assistance was at once sent out, but too late to save the others.

The Scott Murder Trial.

In this case the jury found the prisoner guilty of manslaugter. He was sentenced to ten years labor in the penitentiary. His answer to the question always asked by the judge, was that he was innocent.

William Scott in the fall of 1889, was a widower, looking for a second wife. He picked out Aunty Cook, a widow well-known in McMinnville, whose children had grown up, married and left her lonely. She was a well preserved woman, a little over fifty years of age, of good business judgement, and with sufficient property to sustain her comfortably. Scott possessed a fine farm of 110 acres, a good well furnished house and some stock. He bore an excellent reputation among all men as an industrious, sober, kind, and above all, a christian, man. This Mrs. Cook well knew, and believed that in him she would find a companion who would bring comfort and happiness to her declining years. From her own hand writing, discovered after her death, it is known that she did not find the happiness that she anticipated, and that, to use her her own language, her husband married her "to gratify his lust."

Her death was a most horrible murder. While she was lying in the bed the murderer entered the room, picked up a double-barreled shot gun, that stood in the room, and fired point blank at her head. The aim was bad and the charge, while inflicting a terrible wound, did not kill. The blood stained bed and floor gave silent but damning evidence of the woman's fearful struggle for life that immediately ensued; that she fought the assassin, though no eyes witnessed it save those of the murderer himself. The bloody coat, worn by Scott, which he concealed in the barn and which he refused to own, is, also, another witness to that death struggle. It was to prevent a second discharge of the gun that she was struggling. At last she broke away and run through the sitting room through the kitchen to the back porch. As she stopped to open this murderer again raised his gun and emptied a second charge of shot in her back. She sank down upon the porch, her white nightdress crimsoned with her life blood.

The cool villiany of the murderer was then made apparent. He went back to the sleeping department, reloaded one barrel of the gun trembling so much, however, that caps and powder were spilled upon the floor, laid the gun upon the bed and placed a mopstick beside it, evidently possessed with an idea that it would be easy thus to account for his victim's death on theory of suicide.

There is no living witness to this crime but the murderer. Either William Scott is guilty or innocent. It was a cold blooded murder and it is hard to reconcile the above facts with a verdict of manslaughter rendered by the jury. Many people believe Scott to be innocent, but that he knows the guilty one and by his silence has placed his life in peril to save that one.

A World's Railway.

America, argues ex-Governor William Gilpin, of Colorado, is a fallow continent, capable of sustaining half a billion of people in happiness and plenty. It is the mission of the United States to be distributor of food to the hungry of both Europe and Asia, lying as she does, midway between them.

The time is at hand when all the ships of the seas will not be sufficient to carry the articles of commerce around the world to the nations fast enough. Then will come necessity for more rapid transportation. The plan of this transportation has been the dream of Governor Gilpin for forty-seven years. He it was who originated the idea of the Pacific railway connecting New York and San Francisco. He broke the first ground for it, and every stage of the marvelous development of the West has been the fulfillment of a prophecy made by Governor Gilpin.

He has made one more prophecy. It is that the next great project in the world's material development will be the building of what he calls the Cosmopolitan railway. It is a railroad which shall girdle the earth. The first link in the chain is the transcontinental road of the United States. Starting from the western terminus of that, the Cosmopolitan road shall extend northward through Alaska skirting the base of the Rocky mountains, where are plateaus that will render the building easy.

Then will come Behring's strait. It is forty eight miles wide, says the enthusiast, who has been studying the scheme for nearly half a century. About midway of the strait is the island of Diomede, a large, long island. This would be the central point of the road, and a track of twenty miles on each side of it would finish the work. There are no icebergs in Behring's strait, because of the warm Pacific coast stream which flows northward through it. Once across the strait, which is shallow water with hard sand bottom, offering no insuperable engineering difficulties, the road would connect with the Russian railway through Siberia, connecting again with western and southern roads through Asia, Europe and Africa, and the work would be done.—Ex.

The Electrical Review, in calling attention to several instances where murderers have cheated the gallows, suggests that death by electricity can be evaded in a number of ways. A coat of invisible varnish can be applied to the body that will render the condemned man entirely invulnerable to the deadly current. It would be quite a difficult matter for a victim to feign death until he got into the house of his friends, but it might be done. Other methods are also suggested, but it is pretty safe to say that no one will try any of them as an experimental test.
