GLIDE.

THE OFFICIAL PAPER OF GILLIAM COUNTY, OREGON.

The balls went piercing through the air
Throughout the weary night,
But still he kept upon his beat
Till came the morning light.

Nay, reader; 'twas no picket-guard
Patrolling bravely there;
It was but Newpop, and the hawks
Came from his son and heir.

—Judge.

THE PITY OF IT.

The war with Spain has ended, and the result has been a complete victory for American arms. Many deeds of valor have been recorded on the pages of our country's history, to the credit of our soldiers and sailors, and new heroes have been unveiled to the admiring gaze of their countrymen and the world at large. Dewey, Schley, Hobson, Roosevelt, and others who might be named, have immortalized themselves in their country's history, and have given proof in every instance in which they have been called upon to combat the enemy, that they were the right men in the right place. The work of these men and the work of the thousands of common soldiers and sailors—heroes just the same—who followed them, and made their victories possible, gives added lustre to the already brilliant record of America's army and navy, and gives additional reason for Americans to believe that in fighting for country or for humanity their nation is invincible.

Oh! the pity of it. When the story of the patriotism and heroism of our troops, who, undaunted by the dangers of the battlefield or the worse dangers of the fever-infested camp, carried their banner to victory is told, there must also be recited a story of the acts of men high in the official circles of our government, which will bring a blush of shame to the cheek of every American.

This story, if reports already published are to be credited, will tell of the appointment, to positions of trust, in that most important branch of the army, the commissary department, of men utterly lacking in military experience or knowledge, who sought for appointment more from mercenary than from patriotic motives. It will tell of the appointment of young men, to positions as staff officers who had no more idea of military tactics than they had of making for themselves an honest living, whose only recommendation was the fact that their fathers, living or dead, were either millionaires or "politicians with a pull." It will tell of the mobilization of recruits in camps in which unsanitary conditions were known to exist, when healthful and pleasant locations could have been easily secured in the same neighborhood, the only apparent reason being that the interests of some transportation company, whose representative had a "pull" on the proper officials were best conserved by the selection of the unhealthful camp site and the consequent disease and death of many brave soldier boys. It will tell of sick and wounded American soldiers in camp at Santiago dying from lack of proper medicine and food, both of which could have been secured from our vessels lying in the harbor, had somebody in authority possessed either executive ability or common humanity enough to have detailed a few lighters to land the supplies where they could have been reached by the hospital corps and distributed where most needed.

There is undoubtedly much in the story of this war for us, as a nation, to feel proud of, but, unfortunately, there is much of which we cannot but feel ashamed. Oh! the pity of it.

In some quarters President McKinley is sneered at as a "mere politician who always has his ear to the ground to catch the rumble of public sentiment." This should not be regarded as an objection. Mr. McKinley deserves credit for desiring to carry out the wishes of the people. If popular government is right, and undoubtedly it is then the public servant who keeps his ear to the ground is the best public servant. To execute the will of the people is the service he is elected to perform. If he does that he does much and deserves credit for his performances. President McKinley has accomplished a great deal in this direction. By keeping his ear close to the ground he has been able to interpret the voice of the people and enforce the people's will.—East Oregonian.
