PROGRESS OF NATIONAL POVERTY

Every now and then we are reminded of the deep, the appalling poverty which exists among the working people of England. We hear more or less of similar conditions of apparently unavoidable misery in European countries, but what we hear from London, Liverpool, Manchester and other large English cities is most emphatic and most impressive.

In this connection we may notice that, only a few days since, Premier Asquith, while addressing himself in the House of Commons to the subject of industrial poverty and the unemployed, announced that the government was prepared to provide $1,500,000 as a sort of relief fund. And with the announcement was coupled the statement that the British Admiralty is hastening the arrangements for the construction of nine torpedoboats and five armored cruisers which will cost $12,500,000; and that in addition thereto and as further relief, the War Office is ready to take on 24,000 men for Winter training in the special reserves.

These announcements disclose a combination of national conditions and national activities which moves American optimism to thank God that we are not like other people. Yet, in our own big cities, we have the same hallmark of advancing civilization, namely, widespread, pinching and apparently incurable poverty. We were reminded most forcibly but a few days ago by the Rosebud Agency land episode that the day of free land is fast vanishing and is practically at an end. We may note, too, if we choose, that in many of the worse aspects of our municipal existence, we are following in the European trail. The questions arise: Will we eventually reach the same destination? What steps are we taking to avoid the recommendation of spending our money and training our men in the business of war as a panacea for poverty?--Portland Telegram.

DAILY NEWSPAPER ON NEW LINES.

Announcement has been recently made by the Christian Science Publishing Co., of Boston, Mass., that that society will soon commence the publication of a daily newspaper to be known as the Christian Science Monitor. The new publication is intended to be an up-to-date newspaper, giving all of the news of the world in an attractive form but without the sensational features of the ordinary newspaper. The exploitation of crime has come to overshadow the good things of this world in the daily press, and the aim of the Monitor is to furnish the news of the world in a form which will be welcomed in every home where purity and refinement are the ideals. The announcement says that while the patronage of Christian scientists is expected and necessary to insure the paper's success, it is not believed that its circulation will be limited to adherents of that faith, but that many other Christian homes will welcome a clean, daily newspaper.

Christian scientists affirm their belief in the reality of all that is good and the unreality of all that is evil and it will be interesting to all good citizens to watch the development of a daily newspaper along that line. The wonderful growth of the Christian Science movement all over the civilized world during recent years would seem to insure the success of a publication of such a newspaper undertaken by their society, and it must be admitted that from the standpoint of an enlightened Christian citizenship there is a wide field at this time for such an enterprise.

ALAS! 'TWAS HALLOWE'EN.

You can see for yourself that our boys
are most truthful
In boasting of deeds that are fearful and grave,
For this morning the streets are all bursting and fruitful
With things that some miser would wantonly save.

Oh! Ha! See the monarch, all proudly adorning,
The place where he stands; 'tis the editor's prize,
And he with a smile says blandly this morning:
"I'll tell you it pays when I advertise."

The pursuit it was fruitless, amounted to nothing,
The "man with the gun" went back to his sleep;
Oh! Life, you are queer with such spasms of bluffing—
And stealing of wagons—that makes people weep.

See what may be done by all sticking together,
For all opposition went down 'neath the wave;
The marshal, he, too, had to show the white feather
And sink, unobserved, without rites, to the grave.

Ye gods! Now that grave! Why, it makes my heart fearful
To know that our cop lies buried within,
'Tis a sight to wet eyes, makes an epicure tearful,
But pardon me, friends, shall we call it a sin?

Now I bid you adieu for this Hallowe'en season,
Such sights, for a year, shall never be seen,
But it all, I believe, stands good, within reason,
Good-bye, one and all, till next Hallowe'en.

Central Point, Or., Nov. 1, '08.

There are some of us who escape lynching in this great country and this may account for the fact that so many of us are not aware that more murders and outrageous crimes are committed in this great country than in any other country in the world, and also that capital punishment by lynch law is more prevalent here than elsewhere, in fact it is not prevalent elsewhere at all. The boast that we are the freest, greatest, best governed country in the world is incessant whenever Americans are gathered together. Recently a lawyer was taken from his bed and hung in Tennessee. A few days ago there was a race riot at the foot of Lincoln's monument in Springfield, Illinois. Today a New York posse is scouring the woods for a man who if he is caught will be hung without trial. Lynch law is confined to no locality and may be invoked in any part of the United States and will continue as the only means of justice so long as the law's delay and the pusillanimity of jurors fail to punish crime.—Ex.

"We have Christian Science, Mental Science and Faith Cure; now let us have Stomach Science. Put a good stomach on a man and his mind will be as free as a bird of a mountain," says the Woodburn Independent. Yes, but how in the dickens is a man going to put a good stomach ON himself with the price of beefsteak and potatoes going up, cabbage a poor crop and the beer joints all going out of business? It costs money to "put a good stomach on a man" these times. And then if he should happen to overdo the matter while his mind might be as "free as a bird on the mountain" it's a cinch that his poor body, with an extra-sized stomach hanging on to the prow, would be about as free and active as a bag of beans in a warehouse.
