UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

An exchange, attempting to make a defense for the vicious and unconstitutional policy of appropriating state funds collected from the people of the whole state to build local wagon roads says that Governor Pennoyer recommends the legislature to appropriate state funds to build a portage railroad at the Dalles, and alleges there is no difference in the two cases, saying substantially, that if the appropriation for the portage railroad is constitutional then the appropriation for wagon roads is also. But there is a very great difference in the two cases. Section 23 of Article 4 of the constitution provides that the legislature shall not pass special or local laws on the subject of laying, opening and working on highways while there is no such inhibition on the legislature as to building railroads. True it will be said that the Supreme court in the case of Allen versus E. Hirsh has decided that such legislation is constitutional but we think the cases then decided are different from the projects now pending before the legislature. At least they were quite different in policy, for in the cases which the court passed upon, the money to pay for the roads was donated to the state by congress while in the present road cases the money comes out of the pockets of the people. It might add some light to the subject to say that Judge Boise was on the bench when the cases above spoken of were passed upon, and dissented from the opinion of a majority of the court and held in very strong language that such legislation is unconstitutional. We are glad that some newspapers will stop to discuss the contitutionality of legislation, but regret that they do not more carefully read the organic document that determines such constitutionality.
