Basketball Wise?

By Gene Smith

That time of the year has rolled around when the maple court supplants the gridiron, and ye old Alma Mater can only field five men to uphold its honor.

For those of you, who aren't in the know, so as to speak, about basketball, we submit the following list of terms that will be floating around with the sports-minded students for the next couple of months.

Personal Foul—illegal bodily contact by an opposing player. If the player is shooting, he is given two free throws, if not, one. Five personal fouls on any one player ejects him from the game.

Free throw—A shot or shots given a fouled player, shot from the free throw line, in the center of the keyhole, 15 feet from the basket.

Key hole—lines on the court, drawn in the shape of a keyhole three feet from the centerline of the basket ending in a 12 foot circle.

Technical foul—called for kicking the ball, profanity, or talking back to the referee. It nets the captain of the opposing team a free throw.

Types of passes—Two handed pushups are made with one hand on either side of the ball, pushing away from the body. The one handed push pass is made the same as the two, only one hand is placed behind the ball. A bounce pass, is a push pass which is bounced on the floor before it reaches its receiver. The hook pass is made with one hand, and is usually thrown over the head, much as one would throw a baseball, and a tip pass is made by tipping the ball to a team mate rather than catching it, when passed your way.

Types of shots—The one handed and two handed push shots, and the hook shot are made in the same manner as the passes of the same name. The lay-in is made by a player laying the ball against the backboard, close to the basket, from whence it deflects into the net, and the pivot shot, starts with the player facing away from he basket, pivoting towards it, and making a one-hand push.

Rules—Broken dribble—once a ball has been dribbled by a player, he cannot dribble again until the ball has touched another player. Steps—after a player has stopped his dribble, or before he begins it, one foot must remain stationary. Backcourt—That half of the floor defended by the team in possession of the ball. The offensive team must have the ball out of the backcourt within ten seconds after it is put in play.

Key hole rule—An offensive player is allowed only three seconds in the "key" at any one time. Infraction of any of the aforementioned results in the opposing team getting possession of the ball.

Now, as to a discussion of play on the floor, here's our contribution:

The two main types of offense used in basketball are the "Set play" and the "Fast break." The essential difference between the two being, that in the former, plays are called by the captain, and in the latter, the play is left up to the individual player in possession of the ball.

On the defense, we have employed one of three types. Zone, man to man ,or a combination of both. In the zone defense, each man is assigned a certain portion of the floor to guard. In this type the defense shifts with the ball. In man to man, each player is assigned a man to guard, irregardless of where he goes. The third type, combination, assigns each man a zone in which he plays the man in his zone, man to man, making his shift with the man rather than the ball.
