IF?

If the shortage of gasoline is as serious as it appears to be, it is likely to be the result of increased demand rather than a drop in production. Three areas of use are putting the pressure on supply.

(1) An estimated increase in the number of vehicles put on the road of five million per year. Many of them are campers and trailers that require almost twice as much gas as a small car.

(2) The increase in the number of three day holidays invites people to put their campers on the road for longer trips and more time and they do just that.

(3) The growing demand for fuel oil is in competition with the demand for gasoline.

If the government intends to regulate the oil industry we are starting late and poorly informed.
