"The Linotype Way is the Way that Wins."

GIVING CREDIT TO ALL.

Last week's remarkable campaign for the Y. M. C. A. war fund was largely oversubscribed all over the country. Here in Oregon the response to the call gave double what was asked for, yet it was almost an assured fact that such would be the case. And in eastern Multnomah here is the pride of having done twice as much as was asked.

As was expected, Gresham's response was whole hearted and prompt. Being the financial center of this part of the county, and with a large percentage of its population the result was certain to be correspondingly larger than the results of any other of the surrounding communities. But Gresham cannot boast of having greater spirit of patriotism nor of having done more than the other communities in proportion to wealth and population.

Some of the money credited to Gresham and its high school was thus credited at the expense of other places and school districts, yet, on the other hand, we were deprived of some of our credit by the contributions made elsewhere. A notable exception was the subscription of A. C. Ruby of $500, made in Portland. This part of the county was given full credit for it.

Mr. Ruby also gave another $50 directly to the Union high school, a circumstances not published before and there were other sums that helped to swell the total to the extent that made Gresham, the high school and all of eastern Multnomah loom high in the estimation of outsiders who are now informed of the patriotic philanthrophy of our people.

The result shows that we are ready and willing to meet every call for the comfort of our soldiers, even to making sacrifices; and that we are always ready to respond to the call of the nation for the purpose of ending the war by a complete and crushing defeat of autocracy.

A COSTLY BLUNDER.

The unfortunate tragedy which ended in the death of Deputy Sheriff Bob Phillips and that of his slayer, Louis E. Hayes, reveals a cause for regret in that the public was not warned of the escape of a dangerously insane man from the asylum. He had been at large for six days, yet his own relatives were in ignorance of his escape until he showed up at his sister's home.

It may be the policy of the asylum managers to withhold such information, but in this case it has worked badly. Hayes' life was of no importance to himself or anyone else, as was shown by the fact that his sister expressed the wish that the officers would kill him. But the death of a useful citizen at his hands and the danger that others were in while he was at large, shows that the escape of a dangerous man from any institution should be made known at once. Somebody blundered.

SAVE THE SUGAR.

Because of the world shortage of sugar and the urgent need of conserving the present supply in the United States, so that we may respond in a measure at least, to the appeals of our allies for additional sugar, the United States Food Administration has restricted the use of this commodity for the manufacture of candies to 50 per cent of the amount normally used. This restriction is being drastically enforced through government supervision of wholesalers and their inventoried supplies. With the holiday season approaching, the confectioners of the United States are facing the problem of meeting the largest demand of the year with 50 per cent of their most essential ingredient curtailed.

While confectioners everywhere are exercising their ingenuity in the manufacture of appetizing candies made largely of figs, dates and nuts mixed with honey, molasses or other syrups, inevitably the candy manufacturers must suffer a serious financial loss through this necessary government provision. They are accepting this loss with cheerfulness and in a splendid spirit of patriotism, feeling that it is a necessary sacrifice

Herbert Hoover, the nation's conservation chief, makes an appeal to the public to assist the confectioners, the first branch of trade to suffer direct curtailment of its business by curbing its own appetite for sweets.

"The candy manufacturers have had their sugar supply cut down to one-half," says Mr. Hoover, "and it is up to their patrons to make a voluntary individual cut of 50 per cent in their candy consumption. Also to eat candies made of fruits, nuts and syrups, rather than demanding the fancier sweets high in percentage of sugar." This rule should also be observed in the home manufacture of candies."

BURBANK MISQUOTED.

Luther Burbank, the horticultural wizard, has declared that he was misquoted in the statement recently attributed to him that a corn diet is injurious to the national health. He says:

"I am in thorough sympathy with the effort to get corn more generally introduced into the dietary of the United States. It is in my opinion the best cereal food, except wheat and rice, and people should, by all means, be encouraged to use it far more liberally than it has been used, as it supplies all of the elements of nutrition in nearly the right proportions and will take the place of so much meat with great advantage to the health of those who use it. It will certainly be far better to use a good proportion of it rather than so much fine white flour."

The inquisitive subscriber, having come down to earth again, wants to know why an airplane is called "it" and not "she," the same as a ship. Upon inquiry of the suffragette at our house we found that the women won't allow an airplane to be called "she" for the reason that it has no waist, which a ship always has; also that men are always ready to make glad the waist places.

That new national party recently organized in Chicago declares in favor of the "Republic of the World." If there's going to be any chance to gobble all the postoffices in the world, we'll bet a camouflaged copper that the democrats will all be there even though the word "republic" is one of the attachments.

There is one thing some of us are going to miss on the bills of fare for a long time. Sauer kraut will hereafter be known as pickled cabbage, but it will be the same old stuff with a camouflage label. It's up to someone now to spring a new name for Limburger and Schweitzerkase.

A Chicago man says that a $5-a-plate banquet these times is a sin. Guess he's right, for it ain't enough. We imagine that much money would only buy an olive, a shrimp, one onion and a toothpick, to say nothing about a glass of water.

In these glorious Indian summer days, with Thanksgiving only six days away, it is so pleasant to let your fond anticipations involve about the particular parts of the fowl you intend to lay aside for yourself when you do the carving.

Six "less" days are now fully accounted for: meatless, wheatless, heatless, sweetless, eatless, treatless. An effort will be made to have a cheatless day for the other one if the people can be prevailed upon to fix it unanimously.

Nature made no mistake in the geological construction of Multnomah county. It seems to have been specifically ordered for the swarm of bootleggers, but the rock quarries are being used for the leg pullers.

The Germans were said to be making ready for a retreat on the western front—and General Haig compelled them to make one they were not ready for.

Now that the last day for overseas Christmas packages has passed, only half-seas-over packages are in order, and you must carry them at your own risk.

That little Christmas affair next month will be nothing but a little skirmish to the liberty loan drive that is going to follow.

If the coming winter should turn out to be a hard one generally most of the coal bins will turn out to be merely has beens.

It is reported that Villa is planning a new revolution. In Russia he can find a life-size working model.

Let the war go on! We are wholly opposed to this country buying $50,000,000,000 worth of nothing.

Friday and Saturday of next week will be turkey hash days for those lucky enough to have turkey.

Old clothes can be endured, but there must be a brand new suit of meals three times a day.

WHEN EVERYBODY'S OUT.

Seeing that pretty soon there will be few boys left to which we may apply the admonishment to stay on the farm, we should begin to consider the question, "Why do girls leave home?" It will soon begin to baffle our brightest minds. We are told that in the old days the girls stayed at home, and some of us have a hazy remembrance of such an occasional happening. Thirty or forty years ago there was no place for them to go; there weren't any jobs or professions open to them; there weren't any department stores, motor bikes and telephone exchanges, nor typewriters in the office buildings—that's what, and the girls stayed at home and not so many of them became the inmates of other "homes."

But you'll say, "The modern home is a palace compared to the plain, old, high ceiling rag-carpeted-home of the other days, so why don't our girls stay at home?" We all know that the homes of today, or the most of them, have bright rugs, a bath room, books, a music box of some kind, perhaps a gas range, electricity, a phonograph and lots of other luxuries, and still the daughter prefers the cruel, pitiless outside world.

You can't make a home out of phonographs and bric-a-brac. The modern home in many cases is only a roost for the whole family. Why does mother leave home? Why don't father settle down under the soft light of the pumpkin-colored lamp shade in the evening and read instead of tearing out just as soon as he has bolted his rib roast and tea? Why don't the sons stay at home? Why don't the whole family stay at home like whole families used to?

Now, when the American home is comfortable and convenient and easy, the whole blamed family just seems to try to keep out of it as much as possible. Why is it? Why is home no longer attractive? People, old and young, married and single, naturally gravitate where things are pleasant, so its to be inferred that the home atmosphere is no longer pleasant. People are going to gad till they find a pleasant place to light. A woman will keep her piano dusted and mantle tidied and the rugs straight and the papers in their proper places, and then get into her glad rags and tear herself out.

Her husband comes home and finds her gone and he tears out. The daughter calls up and gets no answer, and she stays out. The son is out anyhow, so they are all out. Even the porch light is out and the cat is out on the back fence. It used to be that the streets were crowded only on Saturday nights. But now, wherever there's music and white lights, autos are parked solid. It didn't use to be so bad in the winter time, but the closed car has proved the last straw, and the old home is as dark and bleak in the winter as it is still and ghostly in the summer. The home has a hard time to compete with the movies and other outside attractions.

SCANT MEAT DIET IN GERMANY.

According to figures secured from reliable sources by the United States Food Administration, the average consupmtion of meat by the civil population in Germany is one-half pound per week per person, distributed through a rigid system of food cards. Other staple food products are likewise restricted.
