"Lorna Doone," Rialto

Motion picture audiences are insistent in their demands for speed, pep and thrills. And even when it comes to a picturization of the classics, some of which were very dull in book form when compared with present-day standards, the same demand exists.

In "Lorna Doone," which is the current feature attraction at the Rialto theatre, the producer, Maurice Tourneur, is doing a big share to supply the demand. He has screened a number of classical novels and plays that not only supply the necessary thrills but are master works of artistry.

In "Lorna Doone" he surpasses his "Treasure Island." While retaining all the classic beauty of the Devon moors, where the story is land, he has faithfully reproduced the countless exciting episodes of the noted book in a manner that will afford any discriminating fan complete satisfaction.

Both story and picture are replete with romance and action. When John Ridd, played by John Bowers, goes over the falls and through the roaring, swirling waters into the whirlpool below to save the lovely Lorna from a fate worse than death, there is breathless suspense as he fights his way out of the water. Then follows one of the hardest fights that has been filmed.

Madge Bellamy plays the title role. John Bowers is the herculean John Ridd and Frank Keenan plays the role of Sir Ensor Doone.
