He in-sists upon his right to speak." Mr. Crane had disspeared into the cloakroom and was peeping through the door. Mr. Flint smiled and cast an in-quiring glance toward the Senator from Washington, who was patiently listening to the speech in progress. Then he set-tied back. Pretty soon another note was carried up to Mr. Flint. "Ankeny threatens to cut loose without recognition unless the chair permits him to speak." By that time Mr. Flint was "on," and the notes cased. Mr. Ankeny was all unmindful of the fun his col-leagues were having at his expense, for the notes soon found their way out into the cloakroom, and those who read en-joyed a modest laugh.
