COLONY RAKES SEA-GOING HAY AS SUN SHINES

Scituate, Mass. (U.P.)—When is a fisherman not a fisherman? Or to be more vague, if possible, when is a farmer not an agriculturist?

This little New England coastal town shelters a colony of seasonal workers who defy industrial classification. They go down to the sea in rowboats but they do their fishing with garden rakes. Or, to put it another way, they do their farming through four feet of water.

In either case, the Scituate mossers are engaged in a unique occupation. Like gleaners of the sea they range the headlands of Massachusetts bay, reaping the harvest of carriggeen moss that gathers in the rocky shallows.

The moss, sometimes called Irish moss, is used for a variety of purposes—as a paint base, in the making of creams and jellies, and in the preparation of certain medicines.

Curiously, the Scituate moss industry was founded by a small group of Irish immigrants several generations ago and has been carried on almost exclusively by their descendants ever since. They live a social and communal life of their own on a finger of land that thrusts out into the sea, literally making sea-hay while the sun shines.

But their tribal integrity is breaking up. The younger men are drifting away from mossing and seeking wider scope for their activity.

The old timers are shaking their graying heads and taking on college boys for the busy summer months. There are signs that the final decline of the small, close-knit colony is in sight.

For one thing, competition from Japanese mossers on the west coast (where the product is called "agar") has made serious inroads into the world market. The Scituate "Moss King," blue-eyed, angular Fred Conroy, asserts, however, that the west coast moss is of far inferior grade.

Now some unromantic outlander has introduced a machine into Scituate for the processing of carriggeen—and the young fry, who are rolling stones at heart, say they will gather no moss.

Also the Law

New Albany, Ind. (U.P.)—Mayor Noble F. Mitchell keeps an eye out for business. Bound for his office, Mayor Mitchell noticed a truck violating a city traffic ordinance. He sent the law to make the arrest. An hour later, as city judge, Mayor Mitchell pronounced the fine—$2 and costs.

Exports

Canberra, Australia (U.P.)—Netherlands India has agreed to purchase everything Australia has for export as long as prices and quality remain reasonable. The principal purchases are flour, coal, steel, fruit, hides and chemicals.

"Clumsy As A Lion"

New York (U.P.)—Sure-footed as a cat, eh? Well, Bronx park zoo attendants have found out that not all cats are so nimble. Five lions recently were transferred to a lairless run separated from the spectators by a moat. One of them is so clumsy he's fallen in six or seven times, the others at least twice.

Fire Fighter Shortage

Sacramento, Calif. (U.P.)—California faces a dangerous situation in its always critical summer forest fire season. The reason: defense jobs have made it impossible to fill fire crews to full strength.

Cricket Blitz

Reno, Nev. (U.P.)—Nevada's perennial summer invasion is on—Mormon crickets. The destructive crop pests are being fought by about 550 men.

Not-So-Frozen

Fairbanks, Alaska (U.P.)—Automobiles in the far north? City Clerk Grace Fisher issued 1,129 territorial licenses for cars in this vicinity through April.

Among graduates of Pratt Institute's engineering school this year is Miss Isabelle Saurez, first woman to receive an engineering degree from the institution since 1898.

Orders Landmark Razed

San Francisco (U.P.)—One of the pioneer, millionaire residences of San Francisco is being demolished under the terms of the will of the late Mrs. Charles A. Rossier. She explained in her last testament that the house had been built by her father and she could not stand the thought of its being occupied by strangers or turned into a lodging or boarding house.

To purchase a car in British Guiana, a government permit is required, the department of commerce reports.

PAINTING ON A BLANK WALL

Fluorescence is caused when an object composed of certain types of atoms is exposed to ultra-violet radiation, invisible to the human eye. The object absorbs energy from the rays and re-emits it in modified form, which is visible. Thus, Franklin Institute's magic mural is a practical demonstration of fluorescence.
