Fire Caution in Forests Asked by Supervisor Here

With the prospect that thousands of vacationers will seek their recreation in tinder-dry forest areas next week-end, Supervisor Lawrence G. Jolley of the Rogue River national forest today issued renewed appeals for caution in the use of campfires and disposal of burning materials.

Though intermittent rains during June have lessened forest fire danger to some extent, national forest officials this week are pointing out that this is "still one of the driest springs we have had in the northwest for several years."

Effective July 1

Fire regulations in the national and state forests go into effect Saturday, July 1. They forbid smoking while traveling in the forests, except on hard surfaced roads, and require camping parties to carry a shovel, ax and bucket.

Campfire permits will not be required this year in the Rogue River, Siuslaw, Whitman, and Umatilla national forests in Oregon and the Olympic national forest in Washington.

Jolley pointed out today that this in no way relieves campers of responsibility for building his campfire in a safe place and putting it out before leaving. It is simply felt, he explained, that the routine of applying for a campfire permit is probably an ineffective means of assuring care on the part of campers. The permits will still be required, however in the 14 other national forests in the northwest.

Consumer Goods Prices Stabilized

Chicago, June 27 — (U.P.) — Sears, Roebuck and Co., announced today that its 1950 fall and winter catalog indicated consumer goods prices have stabilized during the past year.

T. V. Houser, vice-president of merchandising, said that 42 per cent of the items sampled for weighted averages showed no increase whatsoever from last year, 31 per cent "modest" increases and the remainder slight declines.

Houser said that since the catalog lists all types of consumer goods except food and automobiles, it has long been an important barometer of consumer price trends.
