The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation

WHAT TO DO FOR A LITTLE STROKE

In most cases, one does not have to do anything for a little stroke because the symptoms and signs quickly disappear, without any treatment. Often, the distress is gone within minutes or hours. I seldom worry about clumsiness of an arm or leg, or weakness somewhere or numbness, or some loss of ability to talk; those things tend to clear up quickly. The only thing I worry about is a change of character or a decided loss of ability. Such changes sometimes remain for the rest of the person's life, and there is no medicine that can be counted on to clear them away.

Dr. Alvarez

I have faith in the use of iodides because I have seen them apparently cure patients, who, months after a little stroke, had apparently recovered as much as they could recover, and still were unable to work. When given each day a couple of tablets of lipoiodine, these people started to get well, and soon were back at work. I doubt if any drug is likely to work a miracle when given six months or more after a little stroke.

Many persons ask how to keep from getting another little stroke. My impression is that the best thing to do is to eat sparingly and stay thin. One should try to live peacefully and not blow one's top. I do not know of any drug that will surely help. Patients should take hope, remembering that I have seen many persons go 10 or 15 years before they got another little stroke. I remember one man who lived for 30 years after three little strokes that incapacitated him. His daughter told me she doubted if he had any more.

Some people have written asking me why I frighten people, writing about the little strokes, and my answer is that I always hate to frighten people but, seeing that a series of little strokes spread over several years, constitutes one of the commonest of diseases of persons past middle-age, I must talk about them. Also, I want to help thousands of families to realize what has happened to Dad or Mother. I want grown children to be more understanding and hence more sympathetic when an aged parent gets difficult, forgetful, unreasonable, irascible, perhaps a bit childish, suspicious or secretive. Too often the children keep saying to the parent, "Come on; snap out of it, and quit complaining." Actually, they would never be so censorious and impatient if they only understood that the parent's brain was badly damaged and hence unable to work well.

BEAUTIFUL Suzy Parker, says in Hollywood she is "unrecognizable type," never looking "the same two times in a row." That's what she said. (International)

New Homes Cost Must Be Held Within Reach

Minneapolis, Minn — (UP) — A homebuilder said improvements in construction methods must hold the cost of new homes within reach of the average family.

Harry J. Quinn told the National Association of Home Builders that inefficiency in home construction results in higher costs. These costs used to be passed on to the buyer, Quinn said, but today cannot be absorbed by the "average family."

"The home must be designed from the ground up," Quinn said. "Economical materials and techniques must be built into the plans.

"This will be a year which will separate the efficient operators from the sloppy builders in the sales column," he said.
