Disarming an Unicorn Fear.

"This was sometimes a paradox," as Hamlet says. Bison, however, the people of America and other lands have been enabled to pik Hostetter's Stomach Bitters against that unseen foe, malarial poison, which is no longer a paradox, but an easy possibility. Wherever malaria evolves its misty venom to poison the air, and steeping unwholesome vegetation impregnates the water, there is the very stronghold of malaria, is the auxiliary potent to disarm the foe and insure efficient protection. Fever and ague, bilious remittent, dumb ague and ague cake, no matter how tenaciously they have fastened their clutch on the system, are first forced to relax their grasp and eventually to abandon it altogether. But it is its preventive force that should chiefly recommend the Bitters to persons dwelling in malaria-cursed localities, for it is a certain buckler of defense against which the enemy is powerless. Cures, likewise, dyspepsia, rheumatism, kidney and bilious ailments.

The Old Homestead.

"Hello, Jim! Where have you been lately?" shouted a broker the other evening to a portly, finely-dressed man in the corridor of the St. James. The gentleman stopped, shook hands with his friend, and replied: "I've been home to see my father and mother, the first time in eleven years, and I tell you, old man, I wouldn't have missed that visit for all my fortune."

"Kinder good to visit your boyhood home, eh?"

"You bet. Sit down. I was just thinking about the old folks and feel talkative. If you have a few minutes to spare, sit down, light a cigar and listen to the story of a rich man who had almost forgotten his father and mother."

They sat down and the man told his story.

"How I came to visit my home happened in a curious way. Six days ago I went down to Fifth avenue and had a lunch put up at Crook & Nash's, and you can imagine my astonishment when I opened the hamper to find a package of crackers wrapped up in a piece of newspaper. That newspaper was the little patent inside country weekly published at my home in Wisconsin. I read every word of it, advertisements and all. There was George Kelogg, who was a schoolmate of mine, advertising hame and salt pork, and another was postmaster, By George! It made me homesick, and I determined then and there to go home and go home I did.

"In the first place I must tell you how I came to New York. I had a tiff with my father and left home. I finally turned up in New York with a dollar in my pocket. I got a job running a freight elevator in the very house in which I am now a partner. My haste to get rich drove the thoughts of my parents from me, and when I did think of them the hard words that my father last spoke of me rankled in my bosom. Well, I went home. I didn't see much change in Chicago, but the magnificent new depot in Milwaukee I thought was an improvement on the old shed they used to have. It was only thirty miles from Milwaukee to my home, and I tell you, John, the train seemed to creep. I was actually worse than a schoolboy going home for a vacation. At last we neared the town. Familiar sights met my eyes, and, darn it all, they filled with tears. There was Bill Lyman's red barn, just the same, but, Great Scott! where were all the other houses? We rode nearly a mile before coming to the depot, through houses, where occasionally I saw one that was familiar. The town had grown ten times its size when I knew it. The train stopped and I jumped off. Not a face in sight that I knew, and I started down the platform to go home. In the office door stood the station agent. I walked in and said: 'Howdy, Mr. Collins?'

"He stared at me and replied: 'You have got the best of me sir.'

"I told him who I was and what I had been doing in New York, and he didn't make no bones in talking to me. He said: 'It's about time you came home from New York rich, and your father was watching gravel to get a bare living.'

"I tell you, John, it knocked me all in a heap. I thought that my father had enough to live on comfortably. The notion struck me. Before going home I telegraphed to Chicago to one of our correspondents there to send me $1,000 by first mail. Then I went into Mr. Collin's back office, got my trunk in there, and put on an old hand-me-down suit that I used for fishing and hunting. My plug hat I replaced by a soft hat, took my valise in my hand and went home. Somehow the place didn't look right. The front yard bushes had been dug up from the front yard and the fence was gone. All the old locust trees had been cut down and young maples were planted. The house looked smaller somehow, too. But I went up to the front door and rang the bell. Mother came to the door and said: 'We don't wish to buy anything to-day, sir.'

"It didn't take a minute to survey her from head to foot. Neatly dressed, John but a patch and a darn here and there; her hair streaked with gray, her face full drawn and wrinkled. Yet over her eyeglasses shone those honest, benevolent eyes. I stood staring at her and then she began staring at me. I saw the blood rush to her face, and then with a great sob she threw herself upon me and nervously clasped me around the neck, hysterically crying: 'It's Jimmy! its Jimmy!'

"Then I cried too, John. I sat down and cried like a baby. She got me into the house, hugging and kissing me, and then she went to the back door and shouted, 'George!'

"Father came in a moment, and from the kitchen asked, 'What do you want, Caroline?'

"Then he came in. He knew me in a moment. He stuck out his hand and grasped mine, and said sternly, 'Well, young man, do you propose to behave yourself now?'

"He tried to put on a brave front, but he broke down. Then we threw aid, like two skipped school children, all whimpering. At last supper time came, and mother went into the kitchen to prepare it. I went into the kitchen with her.

"'Where do you live, Jimmy?' she asked.

"'In New York,' I replied.

"'What are you working at now, Jimmy?'

"'I'm working in a dry goods store.'

"'Then I suppose you don't live very high, for I hear tell of them city clerks what don't get enough money to keep body and soul together. So I'll just tell you, Jimmy, we got nothing but roast sparerib for supper. We ain't got any money now, Jimmy. We're poorer nor Job's turkey.'

"I told her that I would be delighted with the sparerib, and to tell the truth, John, I haven't eaten a meal in New York that tasted as well as that one. I was sparerib crazy. I spent the evening playing checkers with father, which pleased us both, and I slept in the room I occupied when I was a boy. The next morning I was up early and dressed in the good old country way, and I tell you, John, it was the place to get a fellow's appetite. I was due to eat at eight o'clock, but I was up at seven and had to meet it with—but good. We breakfasted at eight, and I ate a good breakfast, and father said: 'Jim, go out in the yard and see if Kit is all right.' Kit is an arsenal of old things to that one just like the door, and fill up the water pail. Then you'll go off to bed and get up early and go a-fishing.'

"I didn't say a word, but I went out to the barn, hobbled down the hose, broke up an arsenal of shingles, punched a pail of water, filled the stall box, and then all went to bed.

"Father called me at 4:30 in the morning, and while he was putting a cup of hot tea in my stomach I was getting my fishing tackle together. We started off, I carrying both a spoiling rod and a fly rod. He rowed me down with his bulling boat. John, I never saw a man catch fish like he did. To make a long story short, he caught four bass and five pickerel and I never got a bite.

"At noon we went ashore, and father went home alone. I went up the village and bought a new hat, a linen duster, a pair of pants, a pair of boots, a pair of gloves, a pair of spectacles, a pair of suspenders, a pair of pistols, a pair of boxing gloves, a pair of bellows, a pair of bellows, a pair of bellows
