ONE TIP ON HOW TO BOOST

IN THE Herald of Thursday was a news item about a unique exhibit by the Sunny South in the national capital. It was worth considerably more than a passing interest to Klamath Falls and its neighbors, who are developing the country by tilling the soil and raising live stock, which, by the way, is the greatest way of developing a country that is known, and the way which leads to the greatest substance and the most lasting and stable foundation for a community.

The piece of news referred to was in relation to the establishment at Washington of a permanent display of products of the Southern states to get the advantage of the inspection of people who visit the capital from all parts. The casual reader might not think that the item, particularly relating to an enterprise in behalf of states that are so remote from Oregon, which is next to the northwest corner of the nation, was worth more than a casual glance.

But such a display in order to push progress in the interested states is a very good thing. The person or persons who thought of it had an idea that is going, apparently, to prove an excellent one for attracting attention to what the South offers to the settler.

Some may argue that Washington is not a populous city, and not the place to locate a display which is desired to get the greatest advertising by personal comment. They may say that New York, Chicago, Portland, Seattle or San Francisco is the right point of vantage to get the most results.

They may base their contention on the fact that there is a greater regular population and a greater floating population in a larger city, or one whose basis is more made up of business, commerce, trade and manufacturing than the seat of government, where legislation, administration and judicial exercise by the national courts are the basis of the population.

Contrary to this argument should be remarked the fact that the people who are in the large cities are usually busy people engaged in their own enterprises and not interested in a "new" country. The ones who are not busy may have sufficient means to care nothing for what is offered in the way of a future by a recently tapped area. The floating population of most of the large cities is not one looking for locations, as a rule, but is either travelers for pleasure, or those who are wandering about without much aim in life.

But at Washington, which has not much of a floating population, and which city is out of the path of continent-wide travel, the character of the population is varied in a way that no other city in the United States is.

There are senators and representatives there all the time from all parts of the United States.

There are delegations best on public interest going to Washington from all sections of the country when congress is in session.

There are conventions often held there of national importance, and today there is on there a German convention of interest not only in this country, but Europe. Every nation of any importance under the sun has its representatives in Washington at all times, and its natives who reach these shores all want to see Washington, if they are tourists, and must go there if they are officially connected with the government.

While all are there, as a rule, on business of some kind or another, they have plenty of time on their hands on the side, and use that time to see the beauties and interesting features of the national capital. They look about so as not to miss anything that might interest the eye and the intellect.

They go back to their homes, whether it be in Maine, Arkansas, New Mexico, Portugal, Russia or Japan, and tell all about it. Thus the facts are spread abroad in the greatest sense of the word, geographically, for with a display at Washington the greatest circulation of the truth by word of mouth may be obtained.

A display at Washington is not the only means of attracting settlers, but it is a mighty good tip for this section, if rightly followed. A display of the same kind could be put on view in some important city of the West, on a modest scale, which might prove well worth the trouble and expense.

Some good things are accomplished in this county which do not get to the ears of the people on the outside. When the Portland delegation was here ten days since it attended the fair given by the Klamath County Agricultural Association, and an exhibit made there of dry farming made by W. W. Mendenhall was one of the things which most astonished the visitors.

So much was one of the visitors impressed with what he saw in this exhibit that when he made a speech at the Houston opera house at the reception before the party left he called attention to what he had seen. This gentleman was A. C. Callan, manager of the Pacific Hardware and Steel company, who said that the display ought to be put in the big land show this month at Chicago. Last year's show had nearly 300,000 paid admissions, which demonstrates that the people who attend it are enough in earnest about finding out what land offers as to pay for the knowledge.

The Imperial Valley, a newly opened, one-time California desert, a short distance southeast of Los Angeles, keeps a display at the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce the year around to catch the eye of the tourist and settler. It also has a separate room where lectures, illustrated with slides on a screen, are given several times in the day to show what the newcomer may expect to do in the Imperial Valley.

Something along this line for Klamath county would be a good thing.

ALKALI BORAX BEST KNOWN

PRODUCT TAKEN FROM LAKE SHOWS COMMERCIAL SUPREMACY, AND MAY MEAN GREAT INDUSTRY

Special to The Herald

LAKEVIEW, Oct. 6.—Samples of the soda mined by the Oregon Borax company at Alkali Lake have been brought into town by travelers looking over the property, and it shows the purest product known commercially, or 99½ per cent pure. The company having charge of the works have millions of dollars' worth of the product in sight, and with the coming of railroad facilities will ship a large order to San Francisco firms.

This will mean the employment of a large force of men and teams and the installation of much machinery to handle the product properly.
