THE GOVERNORSHIP

THE OPENING gun in the battle for the governorship, the highest office in the gift of the voters of Oregon, has sounded, in the announcement of Charles Hall that he aspires to be the standard bearer of the republican party of the state. His aspirations are subject to the test of the May primary. As the political horoscope is cast at present he is likely to find himself opposed by contestants with strong interests behind them.

Personal friendships formed during his residence here will undoubtly gain Hall strong support in Klamath county, but it will be up to the majority of Klamath voters, who are not privileged to know the candidates except by their public records, to decide upon the merits of the men and determine how Klamath's ballot shall be cast.

In a cursory sizing up of the possibilities, Hall has a lead on others in that he knows Klamath county and has a comprehensive idea of its potentialities. He has shown ability as an executive and organizer as head of the state chamber of commerce.

He has been alert in the state legislature, as senator from Coos and Curry counties, to safeguard what he conceived to be the best interests of the people of the state as a whole, regardless of the sectional opposition that such a course might arouse. And he has not neglected the interests of his own constituency. He will carry Coos and Curry in the governorship contest hands down.

But Klamath must base its decision on broader lines. The Klamath voter will doubtless consider that at present we are practically without representation in state governmental counsels, and his, or her, support of Hall will give opportunity to place a man in high office who is familiar with, and has no reason to be unfriendly to, Klamath's interests.

The political career of the candidate has marked him as a progressive, but his business career has shown that his progressive ideas are of a conservative type.

In other words, he would make a governor who would not be bound by outworn political systems, yet would not experiment with untried ideas. Briefly, a sound, safe, leader.

The Herald's attitude is one of friendliness to the candidate. He aspires to the highest office in the state, an office that should be filled by the best man obtainable, especially at this time, when new vistas of development are opening and the first flow of the tide of progress is eddying nearer. His is a laudable ambition, and we believe his purpose is sincere.

Hall's spirit is democratic and his success thus far has not unsettled his fundamental democracy. It is fair to him to assume that his political success in this campaign would not change the temperament that has won him his present standing in the state.

He mingles with the leaders of the metropolis, but is primarily a citizen of the state, with a sympathetic understanding of the problems of the lesser populated communities.

The interests of the state are paramount, and should not be swayed by considerations based on personal friendship. Therefore The Herald intends to withhold endorsement of any one candidate until all candidates are in the field, and their platforms have been submitted to the people. But we have endeavored to point out some of the standards by which we have measured Charles Hall, that our readers might, like us, begin giving serious thought to the importance of the matter on which they must later make decision.

GEN. WOOD MAKES PUBLIC HIS POLICIES FOR PHILIPPINES

MANILA, P. I., Jan. 14.—(By mail)—Governor General Wood has announced his intention to follow in the near future the policy outlined in the report to the Wood-Forbes mission, as the basis of administration of the Philippines government. The chief executive, through circular letters to all department secretaries, states that while certain excellent principles and policies have been followed successfully in the past, there are at the same time evils that have grown up, which need to be remedied. In this connection, Governor Wood says he intends to prepare a government program that will make possible the realization, for the next four years at least, of the policy which the Wood-Forbes mission's report advocated, and the secretaries of departments and all their subordinates are urged to co-operate in making the necessary changes and adjustments.

Each secretary of department is instructed to submit to the governor general a program of activities of his department in line with the suggestions and recommendations contained in the report of the commission and to this end, the chief executive has issued to the secretaries memorandum prepared by members of the mission which suggests some of the subjects which should be considered and a definite method of dealing with the problem.

LOUISE GLAUM IN "LONE WOLF'S DAUGHTER" AT STRAND

Louis Joseph Vance's "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," the most powerful of J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum productions released by W. W. Hodkinson, which comes to the Strand Theatre tonight is noteworthy among other things for its remarkable settings that even when void of characters in the story are riotous in color and action.

Much of the action takes place in Soho, the French quarter of London, the Cafe Mignon in the picture being typical of the crudely-appointed coffee shops where visitors from across the channel are wont to gather, some to partake of their native dishes and others to feast their eyes upon some poor but beautiful damsel, without whom no Soho inn can be popular or profitable. Sonia (Louice Glaum), who knows nothing of her parentage or post save that Mme. Therese, owner of the cafe, has reared her is the attraction for the curious Frenchmen.

There the train of powerful incidents in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" shifts to The Red Moon, ostensibly a low grade eating house in Limehouse, the heart of London's underworld, but in reality the rendezvous of the most desperate band of murderers and plunderers ever assembled to wage battle on law and order. Here Prince Victor (Edwin Stevens), known as "the Emperor," away from his gorgeous estate, wields his power, with all his heartless hirelings pleading for a chance to aid in his scheme to loot the United Kingdom of its wealth and become its dictator.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter," a sequel to "The Lone Wolf" and "False Faces", was produced under the personal supervision of J. Parker Read, Jr.
