Developing The Mind

THE average man develops less than half of his real mental capacity. The race is constantly producing hundreds of minds potentially as great as those of Einstein, Edison, Ford or Rockefeller, but only two or three out of each hundred ever rise above the commonplace.

These assertions come from the country's leading psychologists, as interviewed by Myron M. Stearns in the February issue of World's Work.

One psychologist is quoted as saying that most men develop hardly more than a fifth of their natural brain power. Another says that every adult, at least up to the age of 50, is capable of learning new things as a child—but fails to do it. Most of us, says another stop learning in our 'teens, and go through the rest of our lives with closed minds.

There is both discouragement and hope in that idea.

It is profoundly discouraging to learn that we are failing to accept our opportunities. This modern age specializes in the elimination of waste; yet what could possibly be more wasteful than the habit of letting more than half of our gray matter lie idle?

Yet there is room for hope in it, too. The blindness and stupidity that cause most of the world's unhappiness and suffering are not things that we must always carry with us. We can get rid of them, just as we can get rid of disease and poverty. Surely, if mankind can voluntarily raise its own mental level, almost any kind of optimism is justified.

The trouble, of course, comes from the fact that there is such a wide gulf between what is possible and what is actually done.

We are born with great gifts, but we are also born lazy. We want, more than anything else, to be contented. We hate things that unsettle us. Comfort is the greatest boon life can bring us.

So we follow the path of least resistance and settle into grooves. We find a comfortable place and stick to it. We make ourselves be contented with something inferior, because it would be too much trouble to get the best.

The contentment that comes from a sense of genuine achievement is one of life's greatest blessings. The contentment that most of us get, however—the contentment that means we have stifled our visions of what is high and noble in order that we may put up with something ordinary and common place—is a curse. It prevents us from being as fine as we were meant to be.

To be restless and dissatisfied is to be unhappy—granted; but it is not possible to make progress in any other way. When a man takes stock of his achievements and feels ashamed because they are no better, instead of proud because they excell those of his neighbor, he is on the way toward attainment.

A banker named O'Leary is one of the business men planning to cleanse Chicago. Wasn't it a Mrs. O'Leary's cow that did the trick once?

Americans aren't so cynical. Who else would be so naive as to ask Canada to help deprive herself of a 100 million export business.

The species aren't related. A scientist lived in a cage in Africa and the monkeys didn't gather about it to feed him peanuts.

EDITORIALS
FROM OVER THE NATION

THE KINDLY BILL TAFT.

From "Masks in a Pageant" by William Allen White: To look back now at the time that was, when Taft was president, and to see him floundering, for the most part patiently, always pitifully, through problems which were almost exclusively concerned with public opinions or public clamor, it seems inconceivable that even the most ironic of the fates should have led such a man to such a destiny.

Figuratively, he used to come out upon the front stoop of the White House and quarrel peulantly with the American people every day. He was a big blond man who had been molded between two six-foot parenthesis, bulging gorgeously in the middle, his trousers wrinkled, his vest creased, his coat bumpy, his collar flaring at an angle of 45 degrees above a decent dark tie.

Being a lawyer he trusted to the spur of the moment to inspire him when he spoke; this partly because he was indifferent to what he said, not remotely realizing the import of the spoken words of a president to a multitude; and again, partly because he would prefer to talk rather than prepare a speech. He had no sense of the importance of a speech as a speech, nor of any other public contact as a part of a statesman's job.

He conceived a stateman's job as an opportunity to do his work honestly, intelligently, courageously; and he sublet as much of it as possible. Hence, at the pinnacle of his temperal power in the White House, Senator Dolliver of Iowa described President Taft as a large, amiable island, surrounded entirely by person who knew exactly what they wanted. Probably the phrase amused no one of our 90,000,000 people at that time so keenly as it amused the president. It was impossible even for his bitterest enemies to cast him for a villian in their hours of curdling hate, because of the easy gurgle of his laugh and the sweet insouciance of his answer which turned away wrath.

He was a man who could giggle out of an earthquake, even though he was himself of the least salvageable part of the debris in the cataclysm. And the American people who chastised him, observing him chuckle as he rubbed the red place where their rage had blistered him, loved him for his merry countenance.

First Showing of New Studebaker at Dunham's Sunday

With a completely re-decorated showroom, the Dunham Auto company is preparing to exhibit the new Studebaker to the Klamath Falls public, Sunday.

There will be six of the new models here for display, including a five-passenger state model President eight sedan, with wire wheels; a five-passenger regular President eight sedan; a five-passenger regal model Commander six sedan, with wire wheels; five-passenger regular Commander six sedan; five-passenger royal model Erskine six sedan with wire wheels, and five-passenger regular Erskine sedan.

The showroom has been closed to the public for the past month while the repairs and re-decorating of the interior were being carried on. Ed Dunham, owner of the company, is promising the automobile public a wonderful display on Sunday when the new cars will be viewed for the first time in this city.

AT THE THEATRES

AT THE LIBERTY
William Desmond and Buddy Roosevelt

The intrigue and mystery of the Chapter Play, "The Mystery Rider," which is baffling the followers of this popular serial at the Liberty theatre on Saturdays, is soon to be solved in the final episode.

That excellent Western star, Buddy Roosevelt, proves that he is one of the best in the business with his latest Pathe production, "Code of the Cow Country," which plays at the Liberty tonight.

From the opening title to the final flicker, Buddy is all over the place in his usual dashing style. That his job as foreman of the Diamond A ranch is anything but a cinch, all will agree who sees this fine and exciting drama.

AT THE PINE TREE

At the Pine Tree theatre tonight the Fox comedy feature called "Silk Legs" will conclude its engagement. It is a hilarious story of modern salesmanship methods, in which girls compete against men in the business world. Madge Bellamy, in the leading role as a saleswoman for a firm of silk hosiery manufacturers, demonstrates her line of goods with satisfying results and a wealth of humor. This picture plays to capacity audiences here, and it seems to please them all, young and old alike. James Hall plays the masculine lead as a competing salesman.

Denny's Newest Tomorrow

Reginald Denny's newest thrill comedy, "Red Hot Speed" plays tomorrow and Monday at the Pine Tree.

AT THE PELICAN

Glamourous scenes on the waters of Venice, in Parisian ballrooms and under Eastern skies, in Arabian palaces and harems, comprise the sweeping background of "Fazil," Fox Films production, which is playing at the Pelican today. Charles Farrell and Greta Nissen are the featured players.

It is a colorful romance of an Arabian prince and a beautiful French girl, and the love scenes between the bronzed man of the desert and the pale Parisian blond are effectively acted. There are many eye-filling scenes, particularly the ballroom scene, the scene in the Prince's harem, the Venetian scenes and the scenes in the Prince's palace. Also, there are many moments of genuine thrill, among them the scene in which the French girl escapes from the Prince's palace.

Charles Farrell is handsome in his rich Arabian trappings, while Miss Nissen has never seemed more beautiful or more gorgeously gowned. The two make an excellent pair, and their love scenes together are vividly realistic.

Mystery Drama Tomorrow

Laura La Plante, who made such a hit in "Cat and the Canary," will be seen tomorrow and Monday at the Pelican in "The Last Warning," another chilly mystery film of the same type.

LORD AND "JUNE" ARRIVE

SOUTHAMPTON, Eng., Feb. 5.—Lord Inverclyde, who recently divorced his wife, arrived here from New York today with the actress known only as "June." They said they would be married in London March 27 or 28. June, who had been appearing in New York, reiterated her announcement that she would abandon the stage.

The fastest thing you can do is to wink your eye, and that takes an average of one-tenth of a second.
