Tex Oliver on Plane That Makes Forced Landing

A U. S. PACIFIC BASE, Aug. 6 (Delayed) (AP)—Lt. Comdr. Gerald A. (Tex) Oliver, former University of Oregon football coach, told today how he and 22 other passengers survived the forced landing of a navy flying boat in rough sea, 135 miles from shore.

"We smashed into the waves and bounced 100 yards. We hit them again and bounced another 10. Each time we'd leave the water about 50 feet. I didn't know whether we were coming down on the water or going to nose over and dive into it. We came down the third time on our belly, and miraculously, everything held together."

The passengers were picked up five and a half hours later by a warship directed by a spotted plane. Another vessel towed the flying boat to this base.

The forced landing was caused by an engine explosion.
