Puppy Gives Cops Trouble

DETROIT, (AP)—A cold and lonesome puppy was rescued after narn near wrecking a police station near here.

Sometime Saturday, the purp crawled beneath the one-story headquarters in suburban Warren township, probably to keep warm. Then he couldn't find a way out.

So he set up a woeful caterwauling. This was late Sunday.

Officers tried to coax him out. No soap. They ripped up flooring to get at him. The purp just retreated back in a hole he dug.

They tried a dish of water, a bone, a female dog. Still nothing doing. Then Monday afternoon, William Turner, a maintenance man, tried rapping with a pocket ruler. It was the last resort, before taking out the whole floor.

The purp, prodded by the curiosity that kills cats, inched close. Wham! They had him. He's in the dog pound now, waiting for adoption.

And the police? Why, they're putting their flooring back in and hoping for no more pups.

Tulelake Weed, Bug Symposium Nov. 15

TULELAKE—Weed and insect problems of the Tulelake basin will be the topic of a symposium set November 15 at 9:30 a.m. in the Marcha theater.

The meeting was called by the farm advisor's office at the request of local farmers and commercial companies, and will include cooperation from the Modoc and Siskiyou county agricultural commissioners offices and the bureau of reclamation.

A portion of the symposium will be relegated to a panel discussion by guest speakers, followed by another panel which will include local farmers' question periods.

Men from both Oregon and California extension offices have been slated.

Weed Specialist Bill Harvey, University of California; Field Supt. Murray Prior, Sacramento; Reclamation Bureau Weed Specialist Gene Cakin, Klamath Falls; Chipman Chemical company chemist J. R. McCambridge, Portland, and others have been scheduled to appear.

Alfalfa Seed Growers Have Big Future

California and Oregon alfalfa seed growers, who produce an important part of the nation's certified seed, face a strong demand, at least for the next few years. So reports farm advisor, Ken Baghott of the University of California agricultural extension service at Tulelake.

A report from the U. S. department of agriculture indicates the supply situation of three prominent alfalfa varieties.

For the buffalo variety, national production is estimated at about three million pounds this year. However, the states using this variety estimate a need for from seven to eight million pounds annually.

The ranger alfalfa may have a production this year of more than nine million pounds, about two-thirds the estimated annual need in the 27 states recommending its use.

The 20 states wishing to use the Atlantic variety estimate their annual needs of certified seed at five million pounds. Such a production may not be obtained until 1955, as only 300,000 pounds is expected this year.

Grass Silage Test Tried

An experiment with unchopped grass silage in a trench, which requires a minimum of mechanization, is being conducted on a central New York state dairy farm.

John B. Babock, who operates a 30-cow farm, says in an article in the November issue of Country Gentleman that the experiment was undertaken when it was found that his big tower silo was too old to stand the pressures of grass silage for another season.

"In addition," he writes, "we had no field chopper, blower or tractor for belt power. We owned only a mowing machine, a heavy-duty hayloader, a 1938 balance-dump truck, and a small tractor. With a trench dug two years ago, these were all the tools needed to make silage with long forage."

The trench, about 60 feet long, is paved on the bottom and has a concrete-slab wall on one side. After being filled, a temporary roof made of scrap lumber and covered with roofing paper was put over the trench. A chain saw is used to remove the packed silage in the winter.

"Grass silage is really an attempt to preserve pasture in as near its original state as possible to maintain animal health and milk flow," Babock says. "It does not make any difference to us, or the cow, whether her feed comes in 2-inch or 20-inch lengths."

Hawke Quits Highway Post

SALEM, (AP)—The Oregon highway department is without a controller and chief auditor today.

Malcom Hawke resigned the post yesterday when the civil service commission refused salary increases for him and his staff.

He wanted his salary raised from the present $610 to $700 a month.

The commission reported it had refused the increases on the recommendation of Harry Dorman, state finance director. Dorman said the increases, if granted, would lead to demands from other state departments.

Cut heating costs with the oil that ends filter clogging!

It's a lucky furnace-oil user who hasn't had some grief with sludge. With ordinary furnace oil an automatic oil burner might be working perfectly, when... pfft!... sludge chokes up the filter and screen, fuel flow is cut off, and the fire goes out. Then folks have the trouble and expense of service calls... and it always seems to happen most when the weather is worst.

The sure way to avoid such trouble came along last winter when we brought out the new Standard Furnace Oil compounded with "Thermisol." Thousands of furnace-oil users found that when you have your storage tank filled with the new Standard Furnace Oil, you end filter-clogging and cut heating costs. When you use Standard Furnace Oil you beat the sludge problem!

Here's the way Thermisol works:

Standard Furnace Oil with Thermisol—
- gives you clean, healthful heat
- prevents sludge from forming
- washes away old deposits from fuel feed lines, filters, screens and atomizer nozzles
- holds tank sediment and water condensation in suspension, until burned.

Even in a heating system almost completely clogged, Thermisol clears things up in a matter of weeks, and keeps them cleared as long as it's on the job.

In pot-type circulating heaters, use Standard Stove Oil
