State Police Car Strikes KF Man

Erling L. Nelson age unknown, whose address is given by police as 4604 Washburn Way, was injured shortly after midnight Monday morning when he was struck by a state police car while walking in the street.

The state police report that their vehicle driven by Officer Harold Singer, was traveling south on Washburn Way, about a half mile south of South Sixth Street, when the accident occurred. They say that Nelson was not visible until the police car was nearly upon him because of the lights of an incoming car. The driver braked and swerved but could not avoid "sideswiping" the man, who was taken to Klamath Valley Hospital by Peace Ambulance.

Hospital authorities were not able to evaluate the seriousness of his injuries late Monday morning, as the diagnosis was not yet complete. However, it appeared that he had no broken bones.

"Please don't repeat a any of this. It's just an idle rumor I made up this afternoon."

Cattle Case Co-Defendant Appears In District Court

Eldon L. Shafer, a codefendant in Klamath County's persistent cattle rustling case, appeared in district court Tuesday for the first time since new complaints were filed against him almost two weeks ago.

Shafer and Paul R. Wilson, a rancher for whom he works, were accused of cattle rustling in three new complaints filed September 12. It was the third series of charges filed against the pair since last spring.

Wilson appeared in court soon afterward to post $15,000 property bond, but Shafer had not been seen since the September 12 complaints were filed. It was generally understood that Shafer was attempting to raise bond money and would reappear either then or in time for a preliminary hearing on the new complaints.

The preliminary hearing began Tuesday immediately after Shafer's arraignment. He had not posted bond before the hearing began.

The complaints allege that cattle found by state brand inspectors on a ranch near Rainier, Columbia County, early this month were stolen by Shafer and Wilson from Klamath County ranchers. Ranchers who filed complaints were Adlai Johnson, Lorenz G. VanderKamp and Milt Sessler.

The complaint filed by VanderKamp was the one on which preliminary hearing before District Judge D.E. Van Vactor opened Tuesday. Preliminary hearings on the other two complaints are scheduled for district court Wednesday.

Shafer and Wilson already are out on bond pending trial in another case involving a calf allegedly stolen from Johnson. A previous charge involving still another of Johnson's herd was dismissed late in July after Circuit Judge David R. Vandenberg declared a mistrial.

In the meantime, Wilson filed a $50,000 damage suit against Johnson and two brand inspectors alleging that the cattle involved in the case actually belonged to him. He also seeks $5,000 for the cattle.

Still pending, too, is a motion by Attorney Glenn D. Ramirez to dismiss the rustling charge now pending in circuit court on the ground it was filed to harass the defendants.

YREKA — A Southern California hunter, Walter Odell Ramsey, 60, of Lemon Grove, was found dead from gunshot wounds about Monday noon in the Elk Creek area near Happy Camp.

Sheriff Al Cottar of Siskiyou County reports that Ramsey's hunting partner, George L. Duff, of Tustin, California, is being sought for questioning. Duff was reported to have left for Southern California yesterday morning.

Two Happy Camp youths, Johnny Gould and Donald Blaylock, noticed the shattered windshield of the victim's vehicle and upon investigation, found Ramsey's body.

Two probable gunshot wounds were found in the victim's head. The sheriff's office shipped the remains to a pathologist in Chico where examination was being conducted this morning.

Segregationist Mothers Ask Board Members Recall

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—A segregationist mothers' group which seeks the recall of four members of the Little Rock School Board hoped to have enough signatures to file muster petitions today.

The Mothers League of Central High School has been campaigning intensively in an effort to get rid of all board members except Dr. Dale Alford, who has often differed with board policies during the Little Rock school integration crisis.

Several signs of stiffening resistance to integration cropped up.

A youth group representing 17 Missionary Baptist churches in the Little Rock area adopted a resolution urging support for Gov. Orval E. Faubus in his attempts to keep schools segregated.

Foes of integration announced that efforts would be made to give wide publicity to statements by a Memphis attorney, William Gerber, who said at a Citizens Council rally that Negroes were mentally inferior to whites.

About 200 white students from closed-down Central High staged a demonstration on the lawn of the governor's mansion to protest any integration of the embattled school.

Many of the white and Negro students enrolled at the city's four high schools gathered around television sets again today to learn by viewing.

Student reaction to the first day of televised classes was generally favorable.

None of the high schools has opened for the fall term. They were closed by proclamation of Faubus in his fight to avert a resumption of integrated classes at Central High as ordered by the Supreme Court.

The governor said at Lexington, Ky., where he was attending the Southern Governors' Conference, that he expected to reopen the schools next week. He has proposed operating the schools as private institutions in order to maintain segregation.

Little Rock voters will say yes or no to school integration in a referendum Saturday.

Mrs. Margaret Jackson, president of the Mothers League of Central High, said the drive to obtain signatures on the recall petitions was "going very, very good," and they would be filed today if completed.

Influence Of TV Causes Bandits Woe With Police

Three bold bandits who got their training on television were arrested by city police while trying to steal a getaway car.

The bandits were aged 11, 12 and 14.

Police said the three young boys entered a downtown gun store, stole three shotguns and about 60 pounds of ammunition, and had pulled their loot near a rear door to be picked up later.

They were arrested about midnight Sunday while trying to steal a car to haul the stuff away.

Officers said the trio, well regarded in school, had learned much about the business of stealing by watching TV. Each of the three youngsters wore gloves, they said, and one wore a Halloween mask.

Perhaps they learned too much. One youngster said he wore a mask because he thought the store they entered was triggered with infra-red cameras.

The leader of the trio, officers said, was the 11-year-old. And he was a taciturn, belligerent subject, police reported.

Asked to give his name, he replied, "What's it to you?" asked where he lived, he snapped, "I won't tell you."

City Detective Dennis Lilly reconstructed this account of the boys' activities:

They went to a movie Sunday night, but left before the show was over. From the theater, they went to Fleet's Bicycle and Sporting Goods Store, 222 South Seventh Street.

They shinnied up a telephone pole to the roof, entered a skylight through a broken window, and dropped—with the help of boxes—more than 15 feet to the floor.

Once inside, they went directly to the lighted front of the store, removed a 12 gauge pump shotgun, a 16 gauge shotgun and a .410 double shotgun from a display rack and immediately loaded all three guns.

From an ammunition display they took more shotgun ammunition, as well as rounds for a .22 rifle, and three binoculars. These they stuffed in a pillowcase they had brought along and proceeded to drag it across the floor.

Burdened with what Lilly estimated to be at least 60 pounds of weight, the pillowcase ripped. The ammunition and binoculars were removed to a cardboard box, which the boys pushed and pulled to a rear door.

Then they left in search of a car. Only the older, 14-year-old boy could drive, Lilly said, but "one was enough."

Lt. Archie Huff and Sgt. Walter Thorne arested the boys in the neighborhood of Fifth and Pine streets after two anonymous callers had reported seeing them prowl about cars.

The story came out — a little at a time — in questioning Monday.

In addition, Lilly said, the 11-year-old leader admitted a theft of his own. He said he had broken into a Washington Street residence—while the occupants were watching television—and stole two shotguns, a .410 rifle and a .22 rifle. These, Lilly said, were found, rusty and muddy, in a cache on Conger Hill Monday.

The 11-year-old and the 14-year-old also admitted a joint theft from a Prospect Street residence, but the loot there was negligible. It was a toy telescope.

The three boys were placed in the custody of juvenile officers.

Escapees Nabbed By State Police

A bid for freedom from the Fairview Home, a correctional institution at Salem, ended slightly more than a day after it began for Leslie L. McIntosh, 25, and his 17-year-old companion, Tuesday.

The two young men were picked up just before 3 a.m., when state police were investigating complaints of prowlers in the Wocus area.

Once they were in custody, McIntosh and his companion told that they had escaped from Fairview Sunday night; their statements were confirmed by authorities at the home.

McIntosh, who gave his home address as 9750 Leahy, Portland, and the juvenile, whose home is in Reedsport, were held in the Klamath County Jail for Fairview authorities, who were expected to arrive Tuesday.

Arraigned before the judge were none other than Patrick Henry Boyle and Daniel Boone Strobridge Jr., in company with two other defendants.

The judge, apparently unmoved by the examples of America's heritage before him, fined Patrick Henry Boyle $100 and 30 days for vagrancy and Daniel Boone Strobridge Jr. $25 or 12½ days for disorderly conduct.

Another defendant, bearing the modest name of Carl Self, forfeited $50 for being drunk and having no driver's license.
