ANY MAN'S EQUAL IN POLITICAL GAME

Roosevelt Showed Skill in Exposing Wall-Street Conspiracy.

BLUNDERS OF PLOTTERS

Tried Underhand Game, Which Could Not Defeat Public Opinion and Trusted Bibutous and Slippery Senator Penrose.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Wash ington, April 6.—When it comes to playing the game of politics, Theodora Roosevel is as resourceful as any of the more experienced men who have taken up arms against him, and he is many times more powerful than the best of them. Mr. Roosevelt's power grows out of the more powerful than the best of them.

Mr. Roosevelt's power grows out of the fact that the public has implicit confidence in him. That is the entire secret of his strength. And before the Harriman-Rockefeller-Hearst-Wall-street crowd can obliterate Mr. Roosevelt, it must shake public condidence in the man.

Of all political blunders of the age, none compare with the $5.000,000 conspiracy that was unwittingly given away by Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania. The scheme, had it been allowed to develop, might have done some injury to the President, but it is very doubtful if it would have had the effect sought. It was an underhand game through and through, and the friends of Roosevelt, who admire him for his fair and open play, would not be readily fooled by it. Such a game would have been a fight of money against honor, and the American public, after the exposures of the past two years, are not in a mood to allow their views to be swayed by the money power, no matter how adroitly that power is concealed.

Gang Wanis a Reactionary.

Gang Wants a Reactionary.

Mr. Harriman, Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Hearst and in fact all of Wall street are Mearst and in fact all of Wall street are aware of the continual growth of sentiment in favor of forcing Mr. Roosevelt to accept a second elective term. They are also aware that the President himself is not encouraging this movement, but that he is very anxious that the man nominated to succeed him shall be man nominated to succeed him shall be a man absolutely committed to Roosevelt policies; a man who will keep up the fight against corrupt corporations; who will pursue the railroads until they show a due respect for the law and for the rights of the public; a man who will be absolutely beyond the influence of Wall attest.

"The gang" wants to block both the second elective term movement and the plan of the President to force the nomi-nation of a strong man in 1908. "The gang" wants a reactionary in the White House; a man who will have an ear for what Wall street says; a man who will let up on the railroads and drop the presecution of the corporations that had everything their own way until Mr. Roosevelt appeared on the scene. But the gang is more fearful that Mr. Roosethe gang is more fearful that Mr. Roosevelt may be renominated than it is that he will dictate to the next convention. The gang might be able to do something, even with a man satisfactory to the President, but it can never hope to do anything with Mr. Roosevelt. He is against it first, last and all the time, and it knows that it has not the power either to bluff him off or win him over. That is why it has plotted to undermine public confidence, and why it is willing to expend a large sum in accomwilling to expend a large sum in accom

Where Conspirators Blundered.

Where Mr. Harriman and Wall street blundered was in taking Mr. Penrose into their confidence, and it is very surprising that they should have done so. Mr. Penrose has been publicly professing to be the strongest kind of a Roosevelt man, but at heart he has been against the President and naturally would be. Mr. Penrose is a machine politician; he has played politics according to the old Quay rules (that is, to the best of his limited ability). He was a politician of the corruptionist type; he used money in his ruptionist type; he used money in his campaigns; he adopted high-handed proceedings whenever he deemed it necessary. When he had the power, he let "the public be damned," and then, when a reform swept over Pennsylvania and threatened the ambilitation of the Quay machine, Mr. Penrose suddenly turned to Mr. Roosevelt, begged for the support of the administration and, when he got it, posed as an out-and-out Roosevelt man. But it was the same Penrose, only he a mask.

wore a mask.

Mr. Penrose did not fool everybody by his zwitch; he did not fool Mr. Roosevelt, nor the people of Pennzylvania. In his egotism he may have believed that the President had numbered him among his advisers, but, if so, he fooled himself. The President took a hand in the last Pennsylvania campaign not on account of Mr. Penrose or to save Mr. Penrose, but ar. Penrose or to save ar. Penrose, all to ald and save the Republican party, and he could not aid the party without aiding Mr. Penrose, who was then the recognized head. Mr. Penrose was a mere incident or accident. The President would have done as much had any other man been the nominal leader. But the Presi-dent did tolerate Mr. Penrose and per-nuit him to name a great many Federal appointees, all because Mr. Penrose was the recognized head of the Republican or-

Penrose No Longer Trusted.

Of course Mr. Penrose will do his best to restore himself to what he believed to be his position close to the President. But it will be an enormous task. The probabilities are that Mr. Penrose will find himself a man without a following. He has been held up before the country in a most unfavorable light. Posing as the friend of the President, he was neurally conspiring with the President's most bitter enemies. On top of that he so far forgets himself at a little dinner in Washington as to allow wine to get the better of his wits; he blurts to get the better of his wits; he blurts out secrets that were never expected to pass his lips, and then, when the story comes out, goes to his friends who were present and asks them what he did say. But to the public he denies all knowledge of the conspiracy; to the public he denies having attended the dinner; to the public he professes his utmost friendship for the President. His explanation does not explain or coincide with the explanation was employed at the electropian or coincide with the explanation to the resort, but was for the President. His explanation does not explain or coincide with the explanations of bis close friends who know all the facts. That is not the type of man who is trusted by the President, consulted by him in formulating public policies. Nor. In fact, is it the kind of man who will again be trusted by the complifing capitalists who are longing to wipe Mr. Roosevelt off the political map.

The loss is said to be $50,000, half covered by insurance.

Clever Political Trick.

It has been many a long day since so clever a political trick was turned as the exposure of Wall street's $,000,000 conspiracy. That event demonstrated the resourcefulness of the President; it demonstrated his ability to keep tab even on the accret ploitings of his enemics, and the manner in which the exposure was made shows that the President is not slow to recognize a psychological moment. Of course that plot will not be revived: there would be no use in reviving it. Mr. Roosevelt and his friends know the game, they have exposed the hand of their ememies, and that is the end of it. Wall street could not put through such a scheme if it played openly and feirly; and now that the exposure has been made, there is played openly and fairly; and now that the exposure has been made, there is only one way to carry on the fight-in the open. If there are any more conspiracies, the administration is going to find them out and exposure will follow. Mr. Roosevelt is a dangerous man for such enemies to tackle, simply because he insists on fighting in the open.

The flurry that followed the Penrose exposure will soon be no more than a memory in the public mind, and when the incident is forgotten the President will demonstrate that he is pursuing his same old course; pursuing the ratiroads that have no regard for the public; pursuing corporations generally that have no respect for the law, and his same policy of publicity is bound to bring him success. The Penrose affair will go down policy of publicity is bound to bring him success. The Penrose affair will go down in history as an interesting sidelight to Mr. Roosevelt's fight for the rights of the people: the body of the history will be written about his enforcement
