Brazil's Dream Town Forms Slowly, Likely To Be Political Hangover

RIO DE JANEIRO (UPI)—Brasilia, the new federal capital which was President Juscelino Kubitschek's "dream town," seems likely to become a hangover for the incoming administration of president-elect Janio Quadros.

Since Quadros has vowed to govern from the unfinished high land federal capital, it becomes the most urgent problem he must face. Brasilia will be nine months old when he takes over the government.

Though 65 per cent of federal administration workers still function in Rio, the new capital's population exceeds 100,000.

Most residents live in temporary wooden dwellings outside the actual city because the bulk of housing accommodations are still drawings for executives.

Estimates of the city's construction costs run from a conservative five billion cruzeiros ($100 million) to 160 billion ($750 million). Kubitschek has never given an accounting of the expense involved.

Capital living conditions are still little more than primitive. Hard rain turns unpaved streets to mud and during dry spells, spiraling dust devils make miniature cyclones roaring through.

The artificial lake surrounding the town is a breeding place for mosquitoes. Last month a malaria case was confirmed in Brasilia. The first ever detected in the plateau region.

Government employees who have received housing struggle with chronic shortages of water and power.

Communications with the rest of the country are at least precarious. Kubitschek has several times found himself completely isolated from the rest of the country by breakdowns in long distance phone and teletype systems.

There have been three strikes against the city since it was inaugurated last April 21. School-teachers and hospital technicians struck to enforce payment of promised hardship bonuses, and laborers got aside their tools demanding minimum wage parity with Rio de Janeiro.

Frequent fires have destroyed hundreds of shacks in the "free city" while poorly equipped firemen could only attempt to localize the flames.

Sometimes dead walls on for as three miles to cooperative government stores where they find prices up to 25 per cent higher than in Rio and Sao Paulo. Basic items, including even powdered milk for children, often disappear from stock.

Great distances and little transport keep most people home at night. There is only one movie theater in town.

Weekends and holidays drag because few have autos to get out into the surrounding virgin country. The altitude has fostered revival of musical evenings with families joining together to participate.

Despite the city's drawbacks, even its harshest critics concede there can be no turning back from Brasilia. Too much has been sunk into it.

All look to Quadros to finish the job that Kubitschek began when he turned the first shovel of earth to begin building of the capital in 1956.

A small group of stone age Indians inhabiting the wilds of the Brazil jungle is threatened with extinction by advancing civilization.

The nomadic tribe wanders naked through the forest avoiding contact with whites, who are slowly reducing their hunting grounds to farmland.

Prof. Laurelro Fernandes of the University of Parana made a years-long study of the tribe which calls itself "Kaiar" (pronounced sheiar). He said the Kaiar will cease to a "violent end" unless their Serra Dos Dourados territory in Northwest Parana is declared a national preserve.

Fernandes said the Kaiar have been retreating for more than a century before advancing civilization. They are now packed into a small area bounded by the Parana and Ivai rivers and can withdraw no further because they have no boats, and do not know how to build them.

The Kaiar are called "Kuro-bam" (naked man) by other Indians who have come to contact with them.

Their only clothing is a small fiber loin cloth sometimes worn by the men. Women and children always go naked, though on infrequent occasions they adorn themselves with brilliant feathers of jungle birds. Women fashion earrings from the feathers.

The Kaiar shun other Indians and have never been known to war with neighboring tribes.

Their principal hunting weapon is the bow and arrow. They are also skilled at making traps for larger animals such as the jungle tapir who hide is too tough for arrows. They snatch fish by hand from river waters.

According to Fernandes, they are gluttons for honey and wild bee larvae, using it their only source of sugar.

Fernandes, who succeeded in being accepted by the Kaiar and living with them many months, said they will eat anything palatable and are especially fond of grubs and a beverage called "kukoai" brewed of toasted manioc leaves.

Their tools are made of wrought stone or bones of slain animals. They have no knowledge of pottery or ceramics but make receptacles by hollowing shells of a fruit called "cabaro."

The Kaiar were first believed related to the Tupi, largest Indian group in Brazil, but anthropologists, including Fernandes, now affirm they are linked with no other indigenous people in the country.

Their language and vague pantheistic religious beliefs are unique.

Fernandes admits no one knows the origin of the dying nomadic tribe. He said the threat of extinction which hangs over them also remains hopes of unravelling the mystery.

"These remnants of the stone age will most certainly be destroyed when they are forced to face the civilization of the atomic age.

"Once more another native American people will die out, inglariously, as a consequence of the merciless breath of civilization carried onward by the white race," he said.

Calico Cat Is Cause Of Much Chaos

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—Minnie the mole disappeared into a ceiling hole and what a lot of trouble that cat caused.

Minnie had just moved into a new apartment with Mrs. A. Pierce, when the six-year-old calico cat spotted a small opening in the ceiling of the basement laundry room.

The cat crawled into the hole. Then she couldn't get out.

The Pennsylvania Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was notified.

The group dispatched agent John Tait. Tait barely got his hand through the opening between a cluster of pipes and conduits. All he could do was beckon with one finger to Minnie. But Minnie ignored him.

Armed with hammer and chisel, agent Albert J. Colling was on the scene next. He chiseled and hammered away for nearly four hours, finally opening a small hole.

But Minnie had become restless and moved to another part of the ceiling. Colling gave up and went home.

A third SPCA agent, Arthur Fuccio, was summoned to the scene Monday. A carpenter and a plumber also tried their hand. No luck.

John H. Milligan, a Philadelphia Electric Co. construction superintendent, heard about Minnie's plight.

Milligan rushed to the scene, applied a measuring tape to the ceiling, tapped the surface, then said, "Up here."

A hole was cut. Four inches away stood Minnie. She leaped from the ceiling.

Milligan, the man of the hour, was bitten on the hand by Minnie the mole.

Foreign Stock Exchanges Have Jitters On Spending

By SAM DAWSON
AP Business News Analysis

NEW YORK (AP)—A bad case of jitters on the London and Tokyo stock exchanges has coincided with speculation that the new U.S. administration might go still further than the present one in frustrating American dollar spending abroad.

It also follows a call by President Eisenhower's Commission on National Goals for still more strenuous measures to halt the outflow of U.S. dollars and gold and for unleashing the guy in U.S. exports and imports.

At the same time the head of the Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York asks for an increasing purchase of American goods by funds from foreign oil grants and loans.

Prices fell this week Tokyo stocks suffered most as the jitters hit hard. The heavy selling that hit the London stock Exchange Monday morning sent a ripple big break to prices in Tokyo.

If he does intend to take stern measures to protect the value of the U.S. dollar, one of the mainsteays of the continuing boom abroad, the flow there of U.S. dollars may turn sluggish. Or at least foreign stock traders appear to think so.

The U.S. secretary of the Treasury made the American position clear in his recent visit to Europe. He could go on carrying all the burden of aid to underdeveloped nations and the present share of the cost of defending Europe. The President has ordered a cut in spending by U.S. military and diplomatic missions and their personnel.

The President's commission believes this, calling for a much higher export surplus, a smaller proportionate share of assistance to underdeveloped nations—putting the finger specifically on West Germany—and probably a greater share in the cost of new weapons systems by Western Europe.

Foreign stock traders might are all three of these as a threat to the continuance of Europe's economic boom of recent years—and losses to the market value of European shares.

President-elect John F. Kennedy in his campaign promised vigorous steps to get other nations to remove artificial barriers to American goods and to share the foreign aid burden this country has borne alone the war.

FACTORY SALES DROP

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Factory sales dropped 1 to a 12-month low in October and new orders and inventories also declined.

The Commerce Department reported Monday that new orders fell by $1.1 billion, the largest one-month loss all year. Officials said the drop appeared to stem from temporary decline in Defense Department contracting for aircraft, missiles and electronic equipment.

ELECTION TROUBLES

TAIPEI, Formosa (UPI)—Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's Kuomintang party is having internal election troubles, according to Taipei newspapers.

The reports said a number of party members changed to protest results of an election held by the party for candidates to the Taipei city council.

Hurricane Donna resulted in about 307,000 claims for property damages.

Deer Charge Draws $255 Fine

Floyd L. Osborn, 43, a California Christmas tree trucker, was fined $255 Monday afternoon by Acting District Judge Joseph J. Thalhofer for being illegally in possession of 26 dressed deer carcasses.

Osborn was arrested Saturday on Route 66 by state police. Investigating officers found the carcasses beneath a load of 500 Christmas trees. The trucker said he was transporting the deer for O. T. Anderson Jr., a Klamath Indian who was going to have the meat smoked. Anderson said he was going to give the deer away as Christmas presents.

Traffic Judge Trial Begins

SEATTLE (AP)—Seven women and five men, impaneled late Monday, began hearing the second degree assault trial of Seattle Traffic Judge William H. Simmons Tuesday.

The jury was sequestered after the defense exercised six peremptory challenges and the state four. It was selected from a panel of 40 prospective jurors.

Simmons is charged with assault on Mrs. Betty Adams, 21, who accused the judge of attempting to force his attentions upon her in a downtown apartment after she had gone to see him about a traffic ticket.

Simmons, dressed conservatively in a black suit, was a picture of relaxation in the first part of the proceedings. He lounged back in his chair and alternately yawned, sighed and rubbed his eyes as the prospective jurors were questioned.
