BURTON J. HOYLE

Hoyle Named To Membership

TULELAKE — Burton J. Hoyle, superintendent of the University of California Tulelake Field Station for the last 15 years, has been elected to full membership in the California at Davis Chapter of the Society of the Sigma XI. Election to membership in this society is in recognition of personal accomplishments, devotion and originality in scientific research. The motto of Sigma XI, founded in 1886 at Cornell University, is Companions in Zealous Research. There are 137 chapters currently in the United States and Canada. Grants in financial aid to young scientists for their research is one activity of this society. These grants range usually from $50 to $750. Hoyle was in Davis to attend the initiation ceremonies.

Sole purpose of the Sigma XI is to encourage original investigation in science, pure and applied, and to provide an interchange of friendship and ideas among members.

Hoyle has published many scientific papers individually and in cooperation with others. One of his latest is a basic study involving potatoes grown for chipping. The treatise determined that the soil temperatures during the growing season are often the deciding factor in the chip quality. Cool soils cause undesirable potato chip color. Another basic study has been in developing a new method of evaluating new varieties of crops, the use of chemicals and soil treatments.
