Recreation Value Eyed

SEATTLE (AP) — A Forest Service official says men in his field are growing more aware of recreational values in planning use of timber areas.

J. Herbert Stone, Portland, regional forester, told that to members of the Washington State Forestry Conference at their annual meeting Friday.

He said the public's concern about wise use of forests is increasing, and foresters are taking more and more interest in aesthetic values in logging and laying out roads.

Timber taxation was discussed by members of a panel moderated by George A. Shipman, director of the Public Affairs Institute at the University of Washington.

There was a discussion of the export of round logs to Japan with Don Dyson, Seattle, of the Seaboard Lumber Co., giving arguments against it and Werner Mayer, Hoquiam, of Mayer Bros. Logging Co., presenting arguments for it.
