BISMARCK, THE MAN AND THE STATESMAN.

There is no better or more convincing proof of the value of "Bismarck's Autobiography," published by Harper & Brothers, than the fact that over three hundred thousand copies were sold in Germany within ten days after publication, and the appearance of these remarkable memoirs is an event that concerns not only Germany; it is one of vast importance to the world at large. It gives us, of course, almost a complete history of Europe during the last three quarters of a century, but more than that it gives us a clear insight into the private and public life, of the man who, perhaps more than any other, made this history.

The sympathy of the world was with Bismarck when, a few years ago, he was forced to resign the chancellorship and retire to his country place at Friedrichsruh, with nothing before him but the cheerless prospect of a idle and inactive old age. He had always been in the thick of events, and it goes without saying that the day of his retirement was the bitterest day of his long life. But as we now see it, that day was a most auspicious one for the world. For had the Iron Chancellor remained in public life, it is probable that his monumental autobiography would never have been written, and we would never have known the great diplomat as he really was. The idea of an autobiography was first suggested to Bismark in 1889, but as he was still in active public service at that time, it was impossible for him to attempt such a task. But after he had surrendered the reins of government and had retired to his peaceful retreat at Friedrichsruh, the thought became more and more pleasing to him. He was a man after Kipling's own heart. He liked to do things, and with his life behind him and the monotony of idleness before, it was with relief that he turned to the doing of his last great work, the fit telling of the story of his life. Like Napoleon on St. Helena with the memory of his past greatness, living over again Jena, Wagram, Waterloo, and Austerlitz, one may imagine Bismarck watching from afar the political arena and longing to be again at the helm, setting his course for the nation. And in telling this his own story, Bismarck is once again in the strife, he lives again in the old-time fighting days, and while in the old library at Fredricsruh he dictated this wonderful biography so Lothar Bucher, and fire and vivid picturesqueness of his words prove beyond a doubt that the old statesman, in spirit at least, was living again in the days when he had at last realized his ambition, when France was crushed and Germany united.

In short, we may say that it is the most important contribution to autobiographical literature during the last century, and that Bismarck as a biographer will rank with Boswell. The preparation of the book was the pleasure of Bismarck's declining years, and he put all his immense energy into the task. The result of his labors speaks for itself, and the German people have shown already that the book is a most notable one and of immense value as a true and complete record of the life and work of their national hero.

In all literature the work has not its fellow unless one goes back to the Latin classics and finds in Cæsar's Gallic war the same chance to be at a great leader's side and in his confidence while tracing the course of important events. The massiveness of Bismarck's thought has its full effect. The sentences march like an army, coming to the point with certainty, but from many sides at once. The reader is conscious of immediate contact with an epoch-making personality, and to know truly now the German Empire was created, we must study our Bismarck all over again. We must know Bismarck's life as he himself reveals it.

The book is an adequate expression of great themes, deliberate, full, and judicial in style. It is a book of confessions, conscious and unconscious. There is nothing like it in literature. We have all, when bewildered in the state problems of their times, wished for the private note book of Cæsar or Richelieu. But the greatest men are usually too reserved for the curious interest of posterity. Bismarck, however, gives us an unreserved insight both into his private and political life, and his style and tone reflect the greatness of an impersonal tribunal.

The London Times says: "In his 'Reflections and Reminiscences' Prince Bismarck presents himself in the more familiar garb of polite society, with the polished manner of a man of the world, keeping his tongue under control, a great and commanding figure, self-centred and self-restrained a courtier and a statesman, filling not unworthily with his gigantic personality the world-stage on which he moved."

OUR ALASKA LETTER.

Lovely summer and Fall Weather—Society Movements.

The news of the loss of all Dawson mail, caused by the breaking of the ice while the carriers were enroute to Skagway, is a hard blow to the "Klondike widows" in Salem. The long and difficult journey which the mail carriers have to make will likely make it well into March before they arrive at Skagway again.

Letters from the Klondike are few and far between at best and this accident is deplorable.

A letter recently received in this city from Skagway gives a nice account of the conditions there and will be especially interesting to religious people, as so little has heretofore been reported concerning the work of the churches in that place. We copy the following paragraphs:

During August and September we had a Methodist minister here, Rev. Wm. Leach, of Puget Sound. He did a grand work in organizing us into a church home with thirty members. We also have a Sunday school, and a Tuesday evening prayer meeting. When the Y. M. C. A. man came to organize that much needed work we had $50 in the Sunday school treasury and we voted $25 of it to help him.

"There are now three places of public worship here, the Union church, the Methodist Episcopal and the Baptist.

The M. E's have rented a commodious hall and the Baptist's hold their services in the Y. M. C. A., tent. One Sunday school is still the order. When the weather is warm we have almost 100 in attendance and when a blizzard comes along it drops to 40.

"We have organized an Epworth League, which is the only young peoples' society in town of a religious nature, and has an attendance of from 30 to 40.

"We have raised $400 toward the purchase of an M. E. church site. One merchant wants us to buy a lot across the street from his store and says he will give us $100 toward it, as a choice between two "evils" he would rather have a church near him as he is afraid a saloon will go there.

"Our Y. M. C. A. is a most prosperous organization, the reading room is daily thronged with visitors.

While the people of this country are forgetful of many things, they have not forgotten that Christmas is coming soon.

Ever since we appointed our Sunday school Christmas committee the little folks have come pouring in from every side. Our church is a little larger than the South Salem church and we were so crowded last Sunday that it was hard to manage them all. There were 34 babies alone. The little folks say that Santa Claus comes from the North Pole and they are sure he will pass through Skagway on his way south.

"We had a most lovely summer and fall, perfect weather most of the time. We got huckle berries from the Indians and fine fish very cheap, halibut, salmon, and trout. Vegetables grow as thriftly here as in the Willamette valley, but a month or more later. There were lawns and flower beds of sweet peas and nasturtiums in front of quite a number of log cabins.

Skagway has graveled streets and side walks, four good wharves, and a fine system of water works, having taken the water from a lake 825 feet above the city level.

"Since the 'Soapy Smith' tragedy and the exit of his gang, peace and quiet prevails here.

"The rush to the Atlin country has greatly revived business.

Temporary buildings are fast being converted into permanent and comfortable ones.

The Atlin country bids fair to equal the Klondike region and is a most delightful climate. Red currants grow wild there and game of all kinds abounds and thousands of acres of tall bunch grass make it a country that can be inhabited with much more comfort and convenience than the far interior.

"There will be a great rush through here to the Atlin country for the next three months.

"It is quite a puzzle here to know just what steps to take as there are so many openings that seem promising. There is quite an up grade to real estate values, and speculators are on the ground. Every available building, cabin and shack is occupied and building has stopped for want of lumber, which of course will be relieved in a few weeks.

"The weather here is not unlike Oregon; south wind most of the time and not uncomfortable without an overcoat." HARLAN H. ROYAL.

Skagway, Dec., 15, 1898.

Watched the Old Year.

The ladies of the Silver Bell Circle Woodmen of the world, and their invited guests held a most enjoyable social meeting last Saturday evening when they watched the departure of the old year and the advent of the new.

Backenstoe's orchestra had been engaged to furnish music for the occasion which they did in a most acceptable manner.

A short musical and literary program was given which was much appreciated by those present. Dancing was indulged in by those who desired so to do and light refreshments were served.

It was not till the old year had breathed his last and the new was well ushered in that the company departed for their homes.
