X-RAYS

Boise, Idaho, is rejoicing with Senator Borah over his acquittal. Borah has reason to rejoice, of course, but why the public should go over the fact that the prosecution failed to prove Borah was connected criminally with the conspiracy to defraud the government is hard to understand—it was proven beyond the shadow of a doubt that Borah knew his clients' acts were criminal, and he assisted with all his influence in aiding them to rob the government. The jury's verdict only shows that they did not believe Borah one of the conspirators. He was only a hired man paid to do the dirty work. That is the position Borah, United States senator, occupies today.

The rewards offered for the arrest of the murderers of Harvey Brown are large enough to cause his arrest, if money can do it. There is no amount too large, if its expenditure would secure the punishment of the cowardly assassins, but a reward may be made large enough to tempt men to put up a job on innocent persons. It has been done more than once.
