Old Jack Falstaff, the merriest reprobate created by Shakespeare, was again thwarted last night in his attempted lasons with Mesdames Ford and Page, for how many hundred times since the play was written no man can say. The broad old comedy was can say. The broad old comedy was delightfully performed by Louis James and his company, so well played, in fact, that students of the Elizabethan stage were more than ever juclined to look upon Mr. James as the mightiest champion of the Poet of Avon in these perilous times, when English litera-ture and Georgie Conan are engaged in a death struggie for the favor of the somewhat shallow American thetinue to enact the roles of that immortal bard.

"The Merry Wives of Windsor," as some people in this town may know, is a comedy. It is calculated to make people now on earth laugh, and afterward to remember what they laughed at. There is a kernel in every joke, and something edifying withal in the completed story as it is told so hilariously. This place, as well as most other sizable ones, has its fair and just proportion of Sir John Faistaffs. It is easy to see by the strut of them and the eye of them that the race did not become extinct when the sack-drinking loafer of the Garter Inn went to his reward. As long as they survive, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be pertinent and timely.

The particular variety of lemon which that worthy was handed still thrives—thank heaven for that—and there are still women who know how to turn joke on such as him. People smart enough to understand the master playwright's humor will find that this play, though not in its first season, is well worth seeing.

Louis James, as I have hitherto remarked, is the most representative living Shakespearean actor in the States, and gives the most complete and intelligent performance of the role of Sir John that any of you are likely to see if you live to be as old as Mrs. Woods, of Hillsboro. To watch and hear him in it is to take three hours of post-graduate work in English. of post-graduate work in English.
There isn't a single point in the lines that is "fluffed" or obscure. The man who wrote the piece might sit "in who wrote the piece might sit "in front" and get a lot of enjoyment out of his play, no matter how many times he had seen it played. Portland cannot afford to miss such an admirable performance as is offered by Mr. James.

The Mr. Ford of Frederick Paulding; Aphia James as Mrs. Ford, the delicious Dame Quickly of Eugenia Webb, and the Pistol of J. Arthur Young are deserving of special mention in the dispatches and some modest decorations. The production is entirely ample.

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be the offering of the Heilig until and including Saturday night, with the usual Saturday matinee.

CHICAGO, Sept. 12.-At a special meet CHICAGO. Sept. 12.—At a special meeting of the City Council today it was resolved, by a vote of 46 to 4. to allow the Chicago Raliways Company an extension of 140 days in which to accept a street railway ordinance passed several months ago. The recent decision of the United States Court of Appeals, deciaring that Judge Grosscup, of the United States Circuit Court, was going beyond his powers when he ordered the stockholders of the underlying companies to accept the proposition of the Chicago Raliways Company, which was formed to control the streetcar lines of the North and West sides of the city, rendered the company poweriess for the reason that the time sides of the city, rendered the company powerless for the reason that the time for accepting the ordinance giving it a franchise expires September 14, and it could not in that time perfect arrange-ments with the stock and bond holders.
