Vhere Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?

How many hundreds of boys-yes, "boys"-come this city every year!

Come, most of them, with very slight understandg of what it is they are facing-or of the immense fluence which the selection of their first "stopng place"-their first "home"-will have upon eir present and future lives.

ver goes far wrong-no matter how limited the perience of the mother in the ways of the rldly eity.

"Get a respectable, home-like place to board, hn," she says as a parting caution.

"Respectable" comes first, even before the loving pe that John's stopping place may be "home-

Because the mother knows-better than the boy bes yet-that it's the "respectability" of the home upon them.

-the people, the neighborhood-the influence which guards him unconsciously to himself against the many evils or petty meannesses of the city.

So it is for this reason-because of the respectability of the users of The Oregonian's Classified Want Columns, and the watchful care of The Oregonian in guarding against all but the honest, respectable classes in the use of its Want Columnsit is because of these facts that fathers and mothers and boys from every section for miles around Port-land read The Oregonian Want Ads and make their plans from them for "the boys." And also for "the girls" who are coming here and want to be sure to find a "respectable," nice place to start in and live at-a pleasant place to spend their evenings and Sundays.

Read these mighty little ads of influence in this paper today, and you'll find you can always depend
