

MRS. TODD WAS TO WEB STEELE

Two Had Agreed to Meet in Walla Walla in July Next.

LETTER EXPOSES PLANS

Hoquiam People Puzzled Over Actions of Woman Who Maintained Silence When Aware Who Murdered Her Husband.

HOQUIAM, Wash., Nov. 19.—(Special.)—The text of the supposed last letter written by Ralph W. Steele, the murderer of Frank Todd, to the widow of the murdered man has now been made public and throws considerable light on the relations existing between the two. The letter, which was found under the carpet in the room occupied by Steele, is as follows:

Steele here enters into a long explanation of the existing financial conditions, and in an advisory strain outlines what he thinks is best for Mrs. Todd to do with her money in the bank.

Now if you wish that you will meet me at Walla Walla on the 15th of July, that is, and if I have no chance to see you any more, and make any other arrangements, you can do as you please, and I will watch and if you seem not to want to speak to me there I will turn and walk out, and I will go to some place where we can talk and surely if that time you can tell me exactly what you will do and I will make all final arrangements then.

Now I am going to make a confession to you: I have not sent my mother any money yet. When I went to Payalup I thought I would send some from up there and took enough along so that I could send some, but I bought that stock and that took the money that I had with me, and since I came back I haven't sent any, partly because I don't want to send it here and partly because I am afraid I will run short. I only have $70 all told and I will use the talker for $500 each week, and if I should get out of work I would only have $40 to get out of the country on and when there are no head as they will be this winter and a man can't get work I can tell you that $40 is not very much money.

Now I want to say here and now and for all time that I will never give you up and live. If ever the time comes that I make up my mind that I must give you up, then I will tell you I give you up to madness, to insanity, I suppose, but I can't help it; I love you just the same with all the heart and soul that is in me. I know that I have said and written several mean things to you, but the truth is that I love you so and want you so bad that when I get to worrying about you I don't care what I say.

Cautions Woman in Detective Work. I hope McKenney gets a move on him and gets you started on your detective work, so that I can have a long talk with you. But, of course, I don't want you to do anything in that direction that will hurt you, and I hope you will get to your attorney and signed by at least one witness. Tell him that if you do his work for him you must have protection.

Lead him to believe that you are anxious to find out for your own satisfaction and that you would never give up your power to do so, only that it will place you in an awful position in the eyes of the people. They know you are working as a detective under the direction of the officers, and tell McKenney that you must have such a statement for your final medical certificate upon him that if he wants you to do anything it must be done soon, for you think I am going to leave the country and if I do it will be all off. If I should get out of work I won't be here more than one week longer.

Wait for fear this may be my last word, for you in several months, I will bid you a fond goodbye.

Officers' Statements Conflict.

Mrs. Todd's first statement, made at the time of the murder, was, in brief, that she had retired early on Saturday night, leaving her husband sitting up; that she awoke about 5 o'clock in the morning, and, finding her husband missing, she called, and, receiving no answer, went to look for him and found him lying murdered. Upon the arrest of Steele the officers gave it out that, suspecting Steele had committed the crime, because of his passion of love for her, they had induced Mrs. Todd to meet him and lead him on to a confession by a pretense of love for him. This statement, however, they prepared the public for the later confession that Mrs. Todd had been on the scene of the murder, had under fear of her life aided the murderer to escape detection, and that under the same fear she had refused to reveal her knowledge. While in many quarters there was a constant belief that Mrs. Todd knew much about the murder than she had admitted, it was not believed that, being a woman, she could have taken such a leading part in the crime, both during the murder and the following period, nor is it now generally believed that her reluctance to tell the story was altogether due to fear for her own life.

Woman Showed No Fear.

It is called to mind that never since the murder has Mrs. Todd borne the appearance of being in fear of any one. On the contrary, comment has been passed on the cool, quiet and unemotional manner in which she has gone through the trying ordeal. She has talked freely and dispassionately of the murder of her husband, and in an unconcerned manner has stated to friends that, although some people thought Steele had killed Frank Todd, she didn't think so, for she couldn't see why he would want to do that or what motive he might have.

Many of her other former statements are also refuted by the letter and her own confession, particularly the fact that there had been no previous intimacy between her and Steele. Mrs. Todd has now admitted that Steele had been ordered out of the Todd home by her husband only a short time before the murder.

Guilty in Eyes of the Law.

The generally accepted theory now is that in the eyes of the law Mrs. Todd is equally guilty with the suicide Steele in the murder of Frank Todd, and that the price for her aid in the apprehension of Steele is immunity from punishment. It is believed that she played both ends of the string, first throwing off the officials to protect Steele, and, after being broken down under a constant "weasel" turned upon her lover to save herself. Steele's suicide is attributed to his discovering that she had betrayed him and the knowledge that in such event his fate was decreed.

Club Team Alleges Chemawa Official Robbed Locals of Touchdown.

ALBANY, Or., Nov. 19.—(Special.)—The Chemawa Indians, with the great Rub Saunders playing football, nosed out a victory this afternoon over the Albany Athletic football team. The game ended with a score of six for Chemawa and Albany claiming a touchdown, which referee Kirby, who is Chemawa's coach, refused to allow.

After the first five minutes of playing Albany kept the ball in Chemawa territory. The Indians scored in the middle of the first half when McCully, aided by magnificent interference, cleared Albany's left end and ran 50 yards for a touchdown. Saunders kicked the goal. Throughout the entire second half Albany threatened the Indians' goal. Time and again they were within Chemawa's ten-yard line, but the Indians' defense, which rallied at critical times, aided by Referee Kirby's decisions, always kept them from scoring.

One minute before time was up, Albany worked a successful forward pass through the hands of Halfback Coates, who was standing on the goal line to receive it, and Coates fell on it behind the line. Referee Kirby claimed the pass was not made in accordance with rules and refused to allow the score, and the game broke up in a row.

The game was played in a drenching rain.

the entire day giving testimony in the case in which he is charged with having killed Fred Tyler. From 10:30 o'clock this morning until almost noon Clarence Darrow, his attorney, led him through the events of his life up to the time he was arrested at Haines, Or., two years ago next February, for complicity in the murder of ex-Governor Steunenberg, of Idaho. He stood up pretty well under the direct examination of his attorney, but when James H. Hawley, leading counsel for the state, had finished with him on cross-examination at 5 o'clock and court had adjourned, the defendant had become somewhat mixed in details. In the main, however, he must have made a good impression. His voice is not strong and he had to be prompted to speak up continuously.

Mr. Hawley had not nearly finished with him at 5 o'clock, having not gone into the matter of the confession at all. He proved by Adams that he always was liberally supplied with funds and Adams' explanation of where he got them was vague. He told Mr. Hawley that he made a trip to California in 1903 to look at the mines, but did not know whether or not they were placer or quartz. This was the time when, upon his return with "Kid" Minster, Adams was arrested at Ogdon, Utah, and wired to Pettibone at Denver for $75 to get back on.

"Yes, I got $75 from Pettibone," said Adams. "I borrowed it."

Harry Orchard's story details this incident. In many instances like this Adams held to the details of his confession. He recalled that he had left Denver following the blowing up of the Independence depot, having heard that his name was mentioned as a possible participant in that crime.

Salmon King Makes Hasty Exit From Governor's Office.

LOUD ARGUMENT IS HEARD

Exciting Scene in Executive Department When Mr. Hume Calls in Person to Argue Claim for Fish Hatchery.

SALEM, Or., Nov. 19.—(Special.)—"If you don't like it you can get out of my office" were the startling words overheard at the entrance to Governor Chamberlain's office at the Capitol this morning, and as these words, spoken in an excited manner by Governor Chamberlain, fell upon the ears of passers-by, there emerged from the office no less a personage than R. D. Hume, the Salmon King of Rogue River. There had been a brief but exciting scene in the Executive Department. Mr. Hume had called to present in person a plea for the payment of his claim of about $2500 against the state for maintenance of his fish hatchery on Rogue River for several years past. The claim was allowed by the Fishery Commission, of which Governor Chamberlain is chairman.

When Mr. Hume appeared at the Executive office this morning Governor Chamberlain greeted him cordially and invited him to a seat. Immediately Mr. Hume made known his business and sought to argue the matter with the Governor.

"I am only one member of the commission and do not like to take the matter up in this ex parte manner," said Governor Chamberlain. "I wish you would bring it before the whole board present and answer your statements and arguments. You can either argue the claim before the commission or submit what you wish in writing. We will be glad to hear what you have to say or consider any evidence you have in support of your claim."

"I shall submit evidence," responded Mr. Hume with considerable spirit.

"We shall be glad to have you," replied the Governor.

"And I want it understood that I am not a poor man," rejoined Hume. "I am a man of wealth and can afford to spend $10 fighting for every 50 cents of the claim and I propose to do it. I am a hard fighter and you will find it out. I am a man of wealth."

"And I am a poor man and don't care a d—n if you are a man of wealth or not," rejoined the Governor as he sprang from his chair. "If you came in here to make threats you might as well have stayed away."

"I wasn't making threats," protested Hume. "I just wanted you to understand."

"Well it sounded pretty much like a threat and I want you to understand that doesn't go. You can get a fair hearing before the commission whether you are a poor man or a man of wealth and if you don't like it you can get out of my office."

And Mr. Hume emerged in some haste.

No substitute for good nature has yet been found. Smiles take root in the stomach. Without good digestion there never can be very much sunshine; for the very simple reason that the stomach and the brain are twins, and what affects one invariably affects the other. The adage that the best road to a person's heart is via the stomach, still holds good.

Gored grub and pappy pie always breed gloom and sleepless nights. They also breed dyspepsia—quick dyspepsia, and dyspepsia shows itself in a variety of ways—belching, burning sensation, an empty feeling in the stomach, bloating after eating, brash, aversion to food, fermentation, or downright indigestion.

There are few diseases which create such misery—long drawn out misery—as dyspepsia. It pursues you, makes you take it to bed with you; it is with you at the theater and at your desk.

What is the only way to get rid of it? You don't have to stop eating, you don't have to diet. Just take something that will do the work of the stomach and clear the stomach, and you are cured.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the most wonderful little tablets on earth for this very thing.

In plain arithmetic, one of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets equals one good strong stomach for one time for one good hearty meal. One ingredient of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest perfectly 200 grains of food in just the same way that a strong, robust, healthy stomach would do it.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets enrich and increase the gastric juice in your stomach, and that is mostly what you need—more and better gastric juice. And it gives the stomach a rest, a good long rest. In the meantime it cures the dyspepsia, and all other stomach troubles.
