Cars on Killingsworth Avenue, Watter and Union avenue, between Williams and Union avenues, are insisting that the Portland Rallway, Light & Power Company iay double tracks to Union avenue before the hard pavement be put down.

West of Williams avenue the people are urging that Upper Albina cars run to the carbarns instead of turning back at the old junction. Mr. North says the company in the old junction in the woodburn Catholic Carbarns instead of turning back at the is a moralist. While apparently having no other purpose to serve than to amuse his public by this scintillating little comedy, he does, in fact, read a very philosophic homily to frivolous wives on Killingsworth avenue on a single track, but inasmuch as the company must of the ave a line from Union avenue to the carbarns he insists that it put down double tracks on the street and help pay that could not possibly fail to command double tracks on the street and help pay for the paving. West of Williams avenue the situation is different. There is a double track, but the St. John cars are the only ones that run west from the old junction, which is about 150 feet west of Williams avenue. A special committee from the Pledmont Improvement Club has taken up this matter.

an interest in the college after graduating. Refreshments were served. Rev. Father Gallagher, president of the university, brought up the matter of forming an alumni society. Thomas Fox, F. A. that could not possibly fail to command attention, even were it less perfectly acted than it is by Grace George and her admirable associates.

This is the first visit Miss George has paid the Pacific Northwest, but it is to be sincerely hoped it will not be the last. We have followed her career from afar, but we were not prepared for such charm of personality, such temperamentality and beauty. She is a comedienne with few equals, and she looks pretty while she is about it.

There is no room for wonder why London capitulated to her last Summer. After watching her work at the Heilig last night, her tremendous success in "Divorcons" seems quite a natural result.

Miss George is a fascinating little younger than most contem-feminine stars. Her man-are as dainty as she her-voice is sympathetic and muself, her voice is sympathetic and mu-sical, and she reads her lines with a per-fect understanding of their telling points. She appears as the petted young wife of a man of affairs, much older in years and experience than herself; she believes, according to her silly little course of reasoning, that she has been cheated out of something which makes life attractive, and engages in a somewhat tempestious. and engages in a somewhat tempestuous but fortunately quite harmless, affair with a no-good young scapegrace with no whit more judgment than she.

The pretty story tells of how her hus-band encompasses the defeat of their foolish scheme for wrecking their lives, and shows the lady the error of her ways and the narrow margin by which she misses dishonor.

Miss George is always perfectly natural and always effective. Her performance will bear the closest scrutiny and be declared wellnigh perfect by the most critically disposed auditor. Supporting her are a number of excellent artists, her are a number of excellent artists, principal among them being H. Reeves Smith, an English leading man who has not long been over. His work is finished to a degree which leaves little to be desired. In fact, he practically divides honors with the star.

William Riccardt, who plays an eminently amusing waifer at a Parisian cafe, a mere bit, attracts attention to his acting far out of proportion to the length ing far out of proportion to the length and breadth of the part, while the remain-ing members of the small cast make their respective roles much what the author might wish.

It is of considerable local interest to know that the translation of "Divorcons" was made by Margaret Mayo, a former Portland girl who has come to be recog-nized the country over for her clever work as a playwright and adapter. The play is adequately mounted and the women of the company deck them selves in handsome gowns to the of their sisters "out front." A plarly high-class audience witness night's performance. There will be repe-tions of "Divorcons" tonight, tomorrow afternoon and tomorrow night.

Anderson Because She Didn't Want to Marry Another Man.

SPOKANE, Wash., Feb. 13.—(Special.)—
Pearl Anderson, aged 15. who eloped from her home, 487½ Davis street, Portland, in company with Chris Anderson, about 16 days ago, was captured by Detective McDonald, of the local police force, at the Wilbur lodging-house today, and turned over to the juvenile authorities. News of the elopement was sent to this city by the father of the girl, J. A. Anderson. The girl is said to have admitted that she was living at the lodging-house with her lover.

When taken into custody by the detective, the girl declared she had been forced to leave her home by her parents, who
