He was the very first swallow I had seen this year, and the fact that he came direct-ly down to the house seemed to show here have had hard rains and winds here the temperature has been hut the temperature has been that he was acquainted and had been here before. I watched him for an hour or so, but he seemed alone, and after a while he disappeared in the sky. I wonder where he went; he seemed auddenly to drop out of the sky and he departed as he came. There is no doubt that the same birds return to the same places year after year. I have known this on account of building and the places they have built. What a mense of location the swallow building and the places they have built. What a sense of location the swallow has, for his journey from the South leads him through trackless paths of the unmeasured regions of the sky, yet he had some compass and sign post that is unknown to us. From his lofty is unknown to us. From his lofty course how does he know just when he gets back to his old home? Where now is he spending the night? If it rains for a week, he will disappear as suddenly as he came, but the minute another bright day dawns I know he will be here again, and he will remain till the cold of Winter drives him away. No wonder people used to think the swallows dived into the mud to spend the Winter-they appear so suddenly and are away again so mysteriously. so mysteriously.

turist, for the cavities that houses young birds in Summer shelter insect pests during the Winter. They should all be tightly closed, but for all the fruit I can-not think of closing the round door that admits a pair of bluebirds to the heart of one of my Baldwin trees. But I will cleanse the place carefully in the Fall. The violet-green or white-breasted awallow is the first of its family to ar-rive from the South. His white breast and back that gleams violet and green I have watched the change coming on since the first of the year. Even in what we call the dead of Winter I went out one day and found the pusay-willows pushing out their sliver-gray heads and the brown catkins of the hazel growing so long that they were swinging in the

The one thing necessary to a violet-green's nest is a good bed of feathers and these are always handler to get about a farmyard. I always keep a sup-ply of these on band when the swallows are nesting. When I stand on the hill-side and blow up the feathers they ask for nothing better, and I thoroughly en-joy the sport. At first I blew the feath-ers in the air and the birds skimmed mast and caught them before they but the temperature has been mild. The few days preceding this spell has had its effect, for this morning as I came up the hillside in front of the house I saw the first trilliums of the past and caught them before they touched the ground. Gradually they be-came bolder especially when three or four swallows were in the game; they often flitted by and took the feathers before they left my hand. The news of a feather supply spreads rapidly. Try it Something in the sight and odor of the first trilliums appeals to me as no other flower. My mind associates them so closely with the arrival of and see. One morning I had six differ-ent birds all skimming about me and circling to catch the feathers I let loose. The competition was so sharp I thought I might have might have a little more excitement at the birds' expense. I took two light feathers and tied each one at the end of a fine thread a few feet apart. When

I saw one of the birds coming I blew them into the air. No sooner had they left my hand than one was snapped up and the bird behind dived for the second, but it moved off at the tail of the first inspecting the hole in one of my old apple trees. When you see an orchardist who allows his trees to remain full of holes to furnish homes for the birds you may know he is a mighty poor horticul-turist, for the cavities that houses young bird at such a pace that he increased apeed to take it. The first swallow had not gone far till be seemed to get fright-ened at the feather that followed hard at his tall. He dropped it only to see it an ins tail. He dropped it only to see it snapped up in the fraction of a second, and that quickly the tables were turned and he was away after the lost treasure. The aerial race became exciting. The swallow with the feather started for his swallow with the feather started for his house on the top of the barn, but he was cut off and had to circle higher. Around and around, higher and higher, twisting, dedging, curving up and down, they went till the first bird, by a swift spurt, got hold of the trailing feather and by a short turn dived straight for the top of the house and disappeared in his round doarway.

"I dare say that if the citizens of the community would do their duty at the polls there would be no need of such a cleaning up of prominent criminals as has been going on in San Francisco for months. At a recent meeting of the Republican central committee each committeeman was instructed to brine the Republican central committee each committeeman was instructed to bring out every citizen in his precinct. Richardson said: "The necessity of having Pertland's full voting strength represented at the polls has been urged right along by the Com-mercial Club. We also appreciate the fact that the city's population is to some extent computed on the number of reg-istrations entered. Portland can easily register 25,000 people if she will. One of the great difficulties is that many people are not well informed regarding the regare not well informed regarding the reg-istration laws. Many men think they are eligible to vote because they were regis-tered last year or the year before; even people interested in politics make that mistake. The Chamber of Commerce will be glad to do anything it can to increase the number of registrations," said President Swigert yesterday. "I will call a meeting early in the week and discuss the matter with the trustees. People have always been slow about registering in this community. # CANADIAN SHIPPING ALARMED

Foreign Bottoms Have Right to Handle Bonded Goods

VANCOUVER, B. C., March 22 .-(Special.)-That the coasting laws of Canada as at present worded are no bar to American or other foreign vessels handling Canadian bonded goods was the rude shock Vancouver shipping interests received through an interpretation of the laws by Commissioner of Customs Mc Dougall. Following the certainty that an imsupplies shipped from Eastern Canada via the Grand Trunk to Chicago and thence west via the Great Northern will soon be routed and will probably be trans-shipped at Seattle for Prince Ru-pert an agitation to have the coasting laws enforced arose. Investigation de-veloped the astonishing fact that the laws do not prevent foreign vessels handling Canadian bonded freight so long as they transport it from an Amer-

can to a Canadian port.

For years American vessels have been handling this freight from Scattle to Victoria and from Vancouver to Skag-way, but it was thought they were doing so only under a privilege granted by order in council. It has now turned out that it was no privilege, but a right. The result is that a strong attempt will be made to have the laws amended so that the interests of Canadian shipping may be conserved. may be conserved.
