Exporters are not all agreed that the success of the allies in breaking through the Dardanelles and ultimately clearing the way to the Black Sea will shut out or even seriously interfere with the movement of grain from the Pacific movement of grain from the Pac

Coast. Some take the stand that the move on the part of the British and French fleets, while intended to crush the enemy there and thereby make a gain if possible in the general strife, is also planned to reassure Russia they have the transport and relieve are able to give her support and relieve the pressure from Constantinople, and that in the main it is a strategic move. If wheat moves from the Russian territory about the Black Sea there are two obstacles to be overcome, it is averred. First, because of the turmoil in Russia, it is doubted if large quanti-ties of grain can be delivered at tide-water in a short time. Second, the danger of a submarine campaign against ships carrying the coreal to England and France is viewed as a hindrance. It is felt by optimists that the bottom of the wheat market has been reached and that it will advance again shortly.
