Judge Knows Something of Bumps on Head Himself.

Gypsy Girl Confesses She's Over-Young to Practice Phrenology.

MUNICIPAL JUDGE STEVENSON

proved himself an intelligent student of phrenology when Julia Williams, a gypsy girl, was arraigned before him yesterday on a charge of fortune-telling. She denied that she had read Patrimoine Burkhart's past, future and present, but admitted that she read the bumps on his head. "Very well," said Judge Stevenson. "I wish you would tell me where the bump of perception is located. Julia pointed to the back of her head. "Wrong," said the judge. "Now, tell me where the bump of amiability is located." "Where is the metulla oblongata?" Julia became nervous. She felt of all parts of her head. Evidently she was unable to locate the secreted cerebellum. "You see, judge," she mumbled. "I am only a young girl and my grandmother does most of the work. I do not know all the bumps and their locations." "I think you are a bump phrenologist."

AL JOLSON IS SEEN AND INTERVIEW IS GRANTED

Hereunder Is Set Down the Results Thereof—Mighty Comedian Makes Good Copy—What?

BY LEONE CASS BAER.

FIRST off the bat will settle a dispute between a feminine "correspondent," who designates herself as A., and her friend (I am assuming the friendship), who is designated as B. A writes in, or at least she wrote in about a week ago, to know where Al Jolson was born and when. So far no one has ever followed an impulse to get out a little brochure or text of some sort on the real name of actors and where they were born, and why. Occasionally some enterprising amateur or some publisher of these little advertising notebooks that no one ever uses, gets out a list of 10 or 12 heads, "Important Facts About the Stage" and when I don't need 'em, say, when I'm looking for a clean hanky or a recipe for freckle lotion, I run across them. I never need 'em. When do need it to answer some patient correspondent, I locate the freckle lotion recipe. That's all right, but it's life.

This particular correspondent must have had a hunch that the only dates I can remember are when Columbus discovered America in 1492, and my own birthday, although the two are not exactly relative. I merely state it because the outside world believes in a man that newspaper people have dates and statistics all pigeonholed neatly through our individual and collective gray hairs, and that we are pleased to call our brain. It is a dull day indeed when we aren't required to inform someone offhand over the phone what is the salary of the Secretary of Agriculture or what was the actual weight of Jumbo, Barnum's famous elephant, or how many bushels of wheat Kansas produced in the year of 1906. Little queries like how old is Lily Langtry, and how many children did Goodwin have, are carried and if I think Billie Burke really loves her husband have ceased to startle any more. Someone's "What's New" column, and we get hold of the someone who fits the case, and there's the answer.

—you remember, we were speaking of him away back at the beginning of this story—it is quite a different matter to one who knew where the famous funster was born. Nor how long ago—or how brief ago—the event happened. Having a hunch that maybe the information would not be forthcoming in an instant, the correspondent added, postscriptally, "I have heard Mr. Jolson was born in Quincy, Ill. I used to go to school with a Harold Jowison in Quincy, but I don't know if it's the same one. Will you
