Children to Be Taught Predominant Virtues Means of Stories.

PUPIL MUST GRASP LESSON

State Superintendent Reads 2500 Books and Tales to Lay Foundation for Work and All Are in Oregon Library.

SALEM, Or., Oct 1.—(Special.)—J. A. Churchill, Superintendent of the Department of Public Instruction, today issued the prospectus for the first course in moral instruction ever to be introduced in the public schools in this state or any other.

The course was not finally arranged until after much study and delibera-tion, which included conferences with educators from many parts of this state and other states, and also the reading of more than 2500 books and stories to give the proper foundation for the proposed course.

In fact, the moral instruction will be given indirectly through the story method. The course is provided so that certain stories, particularly applicable to certain virtues, are told or read to the children, the stories increasing in their literary value with the education their literary value with the advancing

The course as mapped out takes the child through the eighth grade from the first grade and includes 239 stories for the first six grades and a large number of books for the seventh and eighth grades.
The course is founded on ten virtues selected by a vote of the teachers of the state. The ten virtues selected by the teachers are cleanliness, punctuality, truthfulness, respect and reverence courtesy and politeness, honesty, kind ness, patriotism, industry and obedi-ence. To these was added the virtue of courage and these 11 virtues will be taught by the indirect or story method the pupil not being told with the tell-ing or reading of the story that the object is to impart a faith in the particular virtue being considered.

"This department believes that results can be obtained in moral instruction through the use of stories which illustrate the virtues," said Superintendent Churchill in commenting upon the new course. "In the pamphlet outlining the new course, arranged accordng to grades, are listed a number of stories illustrating particular virtues, which, as a result of a questionnaire sent to the teachers of the state, it is considered desirable to try to inculcate in the lives of the children.

"The method which it is designed should be followed in carrying out this work is the indirect method. The teacher should read or tell the story to the children without any direct at tempt to enforce the moral and let the child do his own moralizing. He is perfectly capable of it and that which he does for himself is far more effec-tive than that which the teacher does for him. Of course, it is vital that he grasp the point of the story.

"The listing of stories under particular virtues has been carried through the sixth grade. Short stories with a clear application to single virtues are not available for children beyond that age. However, there is abundant ma-terial for the development of particular character ideals in longer stories and complete books. For the seventh and eighth grades a list of those especial-

Parisian Paper Asserts Former German Foreign Secretary Approved Bolo's Appointment.

PARIS, Oct. 1.—The arrest of Bolo Pasha and the disclosure of tangible evidence as to the source of enormous sums expended in France to corrupt the press and organize a propaganda of depression and discouragement among both civilians and soldiers has created a great sensation, but at the same time a feeling of relief that the scandal which has been clouding France for many months is on the point of being cleared up.

It was affirmed that Bolo Pasha had ashed three checks for 735,000 marks, each drawn by a German bank on Swiss and Italian banks in 1915. The voyage he made to New York in February, 1916, also was the object of an inquiry, but no proofs were obtainable of the sources of the funds which he disposed of at the time, nearly 5,500,000 francs, which were turned over to the francs, which were turned over to the Journal of Paris as a loan, without interest, and in consideration of par-ticipation in the profits of the Journal.
