Story of Fallure Related. On the 21st day of June, 1917, the Home Telephone & Telegraph Company, being un-able to meet its obligations, particularly its bond interest, was placed in the hands of a receiver. Since that time the receiver and the undersigned bondholders' commit-tes have made every effort, through forced economies and earnest endeavor, to secure new business to place the company on its feet and thus maintain competitive service in this terrytory.

feet and thus maintain competitive service in this terrytory. Their efforts in this direction have borne little fruit, for the public no longer favors the maintenance of the costly dual system, particularly during these war times, when the cost of living is mounting higher and higher. It is also contended that the de-mand for a competitive system in the local telephone field grew out of the times when there was no public regulation of telephone rates and service, but now that our tele-phone systems are subject to full control and regulation by our State Public Utilities Commission, the public is in a position to fully protect itself from any abuses as to rates or service which might grow out of
