Opposition Believed to Have Reached Full Strength; Friends to Have Small, Safe Margin.

BY MARK SULLIVAN.

(Copyright by the New York Evening Post, Inc. Published by Arrangement.) WASHINGTON, D. C., March 14.— (Special.)-It cannot be said that the bottom is out of the fight on the fourpower treaty, but it is clear that opposition is not going to be any stronger than it now is and that the treaty will be ratified by a small but eafe margin.

The opposition has not been able to important, in the country. It is realized that the country is overwhelmingly in favor of ratification, and the

Reed Tangled on Treaty. At one point Reed was talking a if he assumed the Anglo-Japanese al-liance would continue to exist after the adoption of the four-power treaty. Senator Lenroot called his attention to the fact that the treaty, in its language, specifically terminates the Anglo-Japanese alliances. Thereupon Reed passed it off by saying he had not noticed that. Inasmuch as this is the most important point in the treaty and con-stitutes its chief purpose, such an ad-mission left Reed in about as awkward a position as any senator often finds himself in. We noticed when we read the printed account of the debate in the Congressional Record the next day that this passage Beween Lenroot and
