

Housing Named for Civil Rights Pioneer

Development to bring 80 affordable apartments

Beatrice Morrow-Cannady, a historic Portland pioneer in the fight for racial equality, has been honored by Community Reinvestment Initiatives (PCRI) by naming their future affordable housing complex on Northeast Martin Luther King Boulevard in her honor.

The new building, just south of Fremont Street on the former Grant Warehouse site, will be named "The Beatrice Morrow" to recognize Morrow-Cannady's work to achieve equality for the African American community and to improve race relations. "PCRI is proud to honor Ms. Morrow by naming our newest development 'The Beatrice Morrow,'" stated Maxine Fitzpatrick, executive director of PCRI. "She is the basis of the opportunities available to African Americans in the State of Oregon and motivates us to continue her work to achieve equity and equality."

A new affordable housing complex coming to the former Grant Warehouse site on Northeast Martin Luther King Jr. Boulevard will be named after Beatrice Morrow-Cannady, a civil rights pioneer.

Plans call for 80 affordable apartments at the location which will be prioritized for historic residents of north and northeast Portland who have been displaced. In addition, the development will offer community space and community-serving commercial retail at street level.

Construction will begin this spring, with completion anticipated in 2018.

An important, but often overlooked and hidden figure in the fight for racial equality in the Pacific Northwest, Beatrice Morrow-Cannady worked tirelessly to improve race relations in Portland and to secure equal rights for the Oregon's African American community.

She moved to Portland in 1910 at the age of 20 and worked as the business manager, associate editor, linotype operator, and editorial and news writer for the African American newspaper, the Advocate. She helped found the Portland chapter of the NAACP and mobilized African-American women for the war effort, as president of the Colonel Charles Young War Savings Club and as head of a local Red Cross Auxiliary's knitting unit.

She graduated from Portland's Northwestern School of Law in An ongoing series of questions and answers about America's natural healing profession.

Part 26 KIDS AND CHIROPRACTIC As the twig is bent so grows the tree

Q: I have recently noticed my son has one shoulder higher than the other. Could this be a sign of a problem in his spine?

A: Good thinking, mom! It surely could. In fact having one shoulder higher than the other is a cardinal sign of curvature of the spine. According to Chiropractic research, the earlier a curvature is caught, the higher the potential for success. To be certain about health of your child, call our office today for a professional spinal evaluation. Spines (big or small) are our specialty.

Q: I have been told that my child needs an operation for a curvature in her spine. Is there an alternative?

A: You most definitely should have a thorough Chiropractic checkup on your child immediately. Spinal surgery gets. All conservative efforts at handling your child's problem should be considered before consenting to surgery. Our office is highly trained and skilled at handling problems like that of your child's. Don't be fooled by the thought of "watching the condition" either. Without proper assistance it won't go away. Offer your children the best in health care. Give them regular Chiropractic checkups. As the twig is bent so grows the tree!
