HOW A CAT FALLS.

Experiments to Determine Why It Always Lands on Its Feet.

Nature prints a series of photographs of a tumbling cat, taken by M. Marey with the view of determining the mechanical conditions which enable the animal to alight on its feet. The process of falling is represented in 19 phases, from the time it leaves the hands of the demonstrator at the top of the wall until it reaches the earth and walks away; while side and end views are given of each series.

The cat was held by its feet and let go in that position; and in the first five phases scarcely any perceptible change in position is shown. But from the sixth up to the final one, there is a variation in each, the animal gradually coming over with its feet downward. M. Morey, from his observation and study of the photographs, believes that it is the inertia of its own mass that the cat uses to right liself. The torsion couple which produces the action of the muscles of the vertebrae acts at first on the forelegs, which have a very small motion of inertia on account of the front feet being foreshortened and pressed against the neck.

The hind legs, however, being stretched out and almost perpendicular to the axis of the body, possess a moment of inertia which opposes motion in the opposite diwhich oppos rection to that which the torsion couple tends to puroduce. In the second phase of the action, the attitude of the feet is reversed; and it is the inertia of the fore-part that furnishes & fulcrum for the ro-tation of the rear.

The Latter-Day Child.

Lewiston (Me.) Journal.* The end-of-the-century baby is a philo opher. A child was rebuked by her father for breaking a window in a fit of temper.
"This, my child," said the father, "is wickedness." "No, papa." replied the child, reprovingly, "it is hereditary."
