day on the steamer T. M. Richardson for A. Landuth and wife, E. B. Wood, Miss to carry them the inland. This his been the best year, so far as pleasure-seekers are concerned, that Newport his had since 1897. The hotels hive been full simost all Summer, and the owners feel highly eleted over their prosperous sea-son, which bids well to last far into Sep-tember. There was scarcely a vacant house along the beach, and campers were and still are very numerous at Nye Creek. During the season the Copfaille & Eastern Ralirosd has been running Sunday ex-cursions from Albany to Yaquina. Cap-tain Davin, of the T. M. Richardson, had a large burge built for this year's travel, and he can accommodate 500 people at once. Today a large crowd is looked for from Albany and way points, and prepara-tions have been made to properly entertain all who come.

For the amasement of the visitors the people of Newport raised criough money by subscription to get the Salem Military Hand to play for two weeks. Almost every night there is a band concert, dance or moonlight excursion. Thursday evening the Chemawa Indian Band gave a grand moonlight excursion up the Yaquina River to Toicedo. About 300 people enjoyed themselves on this trip. Nearly every evening there is a large bonfire on the Nye Creek beach, and during the day the beach is covered with people hunting for agates, overed with people hunting for agates,

NEWPORT. Or., Aus. 2.—(Special.)—The

Apart from the fact that it was preached by women, a novel feature of the sermon was that its time-honored "frestly." "secondly," "thirdly" and "fourthly" were divided among four actractive young women, who delivered with much force and earnestness their thoughts upon that branch of the text allotted to them. The fair preachers, Miss Edith Gomersail, Miss Ethel Kroger, Miss Edith Gomersail, Miss Ethel Kroger, Miss Edith Lindsay and Miss, Sadie Hayes, had "Contentment" for the subject of their quadruplex sermon. The text was from the ninth chapter of the Book of Judges, the 7th to the list verses. Each speaker took a part of Jotham's famous parable, such as that relating to the olive tree, the fig tree, the bramble and the vine, and deduced the forceful sermon from the rebuke to Abimelech and the Shechemites.

SECOND-HAND SIDEWALKS New York Dealers Traffic in Them Quite Extensively.

New York Sun.
"Never heard of second-hand sidewalks before?" said a dealer in second-hand building materials. "Why, where can you have been all the time?"

There have been second-hand side-walks as long as there have been dealers in second-hand building materials, and this business has been carried on in New York in a large way for 30 or 40 years at

"When a dealer buys an old building "When a dealer buys an old building and contracts to move it he buys everything pertaining to it, out to the street curb, including the sidewalk. That's where the accond-hand vault lights and vault covers come from and, of course, the second-hand flagstones.

"We bring these flags along with the cost of the meterial to our varies and

"We bring those flags along with the rest of the material to our yards and stand 'em up to wait for purchasers. They are sold for making repairs to stone pavements, and also to lay as complete pavements. Second-hand flags are sold for these uses not only here, but in smaller cities and other places anywhere within a radius of two or three hundred miles of New York.

miles of New York.

"Modern concrete pavements hurt the trade in second-hand flage? Surely. Before the days of artificial pavements there was a sale for all the flags we got as fast as we got them. Then with the growth of the concrete pavements came a truce when the flags stacked up on us, more or less, and we used to wonder sometimes if we should ever sell them.

"And then along would came somebody and buy a mile of flagging at once; might be somebody laying out a property, or something of that sort. Or we might have a run on flagging and sell all we had So that while there isn't the demand for second-hand flags that there once was, there is still a market for them at some price.

"Perhaps there are such things as second-hand street pavements, too. Why, certainly: though that's something not in our line. Second-hand paving blocks would be supplied by contractors who had taken them up preparatory to laying a new street pavement. "It would be stipulated, for instance.

in the contract, that the contractor put-ting down the new pavement should have the material of the old one to be removed. He might sell the old blocks as they were or take them to his yards and have were, or take them to his yards and have those that were much worn or rounded chipped and refaced; or, for that matter, he might have such blocks entirely re-dressed, making new blocks of them.

"The paving blocks thus removed, as no longer suitable for use where they were originally laid, under the traffic to which they would now he subjected might still do for street pavements in smaller cities and towns, or for various private rendways, and their cheapness commends them, and thus there is a market for them all.

"So there are indeed second-hand street pavements, as well as second-hand side-walks; but there isn't really anything very remarkable about that. If you should stop to consider for just a minute you would realize that it would be very difficult to think of anything that could not be bought second-hand."
