OLYMPIA MAN IS PLEASED

Secretary of Washington Bar Association Makes Pretty Speech.

WILL Shaffer, Past Exalted Ruler of Olympia Lodge No. 186, thinks he expresses the feeling of every person who visited Portland this week in connection with the Elks' Grand Lodge reunion by insisting that the converse of the sentiment contained in the editorial of The Oregonian this morning would more appropriately fit the occasion.

"The patience of the officers, the extreme courtesy, the unfailing energy and the disinterestedness of every thing except that which looked to the pleasure of their guests, and the orderly and quiet way in which they did their work was a marvel to all who came. Portland Lodge may have only 1400 members on its rolls, but to the outsider it seemed as though every man, woman and child in the city thought he belonged to the local lodge and was doing everything he could to entertain us. Next to the bewilderment of the visitors the unbounded hospitality shown them is their surprise at the great number of beautiful and happy women in this city. Either none but beautiful women ever came here or nature herself has made this a beauty parlor and transformed them into the handsome creatures they are."

FARM WORK LAUDED

"Back to Soil" Movement Praised by Educator.

CHILD IS BEST BEGINNING

N. C. Maris Speaks Before Teachers at Corvallis and Extols Step That Has Been Taken in Portland Contests.

In an address before the teachers' Summer short course institute at Corvallis last week, N. C. Maris, of Portland, reviewed the industrial work of the school children throughout the state. "The back-to-the-land movement has come to stay, and is not only state wide, but is rapidly growing nation wide and world-wide," said Mr. Maris. "It is the most popular movement that has negotiated in recent years. Affecting as it does the very wool and warp of the physical, social and commercial texture of our body politic, it is attracting the attention of our economic philosophers, educators and financiers in a way that is bound to revolutionize the world. "It begins with the child—the only logical place to start any great reform or educational movement. It begins with the child in the home and in the school. The secret of success in this great work in the future lies in the proper correlation of the intellectual and industrial activities of the child in the home and at school. "Farmer Offers Access. "While the farmer may have to pay an unjust proportion of taxes, and does not get what he is entitled to for the labor and capital he invests; while he may not get what the market price justly entitles him to for his crops, how that grand parade, and a prouder bunch did not march down the streets that day than those juvenile farmers. And everybody was proud of them, especially their parents. I presume you all appreciate the fact that the shortest route to the parents' heart is through the child, and if you would popularize a movement, the quickest way is through the children.

"A spirit of rivalry is a splendid thing to stimulate interest, activity and thoroughness, and this is accomplished among the children by holding fairs and giving prizes. And it is my belief that the more these fairs can be localized the better. By holding a contest in each district, or by a few districts combining to hold a contest at a convention community center, it is brought within the reach of every family and every child. "The social feature can be better emphasized, too, in the local fair, and is a matter of much importance. Let the whole neighborhood turn out with their basket dinners, and make it a real country life picnic. Let the children and their exhibits be the center of attraction. Pass upon and award them their prizes, and make them feel that they are really a master of some importance. "Disgrace is to Oregon. "This is a disgrace, when Oregon has almost unequalled adaptability for the production of poultry and eggs. The same is true of other products which we should produce, instead of sending our money away for them, and our educational system is largely responsible for this condition. The tendency of our system has been to popularize commercial and professional life, and to minimize agriculture and other industrial pursuits—to educate our people to be consumers and not producers. The result is that the professions are all overcrowded, the country depopulated and the cities overrun with people, many of whom are idle, discontented and poorly fed and furnished. "A wonderful change can be wrought in public school sentiment in a very short time. Instance—the School Children's Garden Contest in the city of Portland. Two years ago I doubt if you could have hired a boy on any occasion to have carried a hoe or a basket of vegetables down the streets of that city. Last year the Y. M. C. A. put on a garden contest. This year it was taken up by enterprising, public-spirited business men, and put on as an all-city movement. "Children Best Medium. "In the school children's parade at the Rose Carnival one school personified the garden contest. The girls wore sun bonnets, and carried baskets of flowers and vegetables. The small boys wore straw hats and carried hoes and garden rakes, while the larger boys brought up the rear with wheel-barrow loads of garden products. This was one of the most popular features of
