Declaring that he will, be fair and fearless and that he will work only in the interests of the general public as against any clique or political factors, whether the venture will be a paying one, is problematical, although Miss Steers declares it as her belief that it will be, but it matters not—the Chicago Grand Opera Company will be here, 300 strong for the four productions.

Interest is Aroused.

With the bare rumor that the big organization was to be here, letters have been pouring into the office of Miss Steers from every section of the state. In fact, she has been much surprised to receive inquifres from numerius outperple who are eager to hear this company when it comes to Portland.

"It will be the first time that we have ever had grand opera on such a magnificent scale," said Miss Steers, "and it is evident even at this carly date that it is going to be a success in every way, it means much to Portland to have this organization come here in its full strength. If it is patronized as I feel certain it will be, I believe it will be an annual event."

The Chicago Grand Opera Company is backed by Chicago people in part and in part by some of the men who stand financially behind the Metropolitian Opera Company, of New York. Harold F. McCornick is president; Other Company and Charles G. Dawes are vice-president; Chicago is an annual event."

MISSIONARY TO ALASKA GUEST AT RECEPTION.

That Portland and Oregon people may have the opportunity to enjoy real grand opera on a magnificent scale, with nothing left out, either in numbers or quality of the cast, there has been posted a guarantee of $24,000 by men of this city to bring the Chicago Grand Opera Company to the Orpheum Theater for four performances, beginning with Monday night, March 31, and ending Wednesday night, April 2.

MISS ISABELLA C. BOURBILL

A largely attended meeting was held in Pledmont Presbyterian Church on Wednesday night to say farewell to Miss Isabella C. Bourhill, who has responded to a call to the mission field in Alaska. Miss Bourhill, who has resided in Pledmont for several years, has been a leader in Sunday school work, and the Pledmont church loses in her departure one of its most active members. A recent appeal from the Sheldon Jackson Training School at Sirka, Alaska, for another teacher was promptly a hawered by Miss Bourhill, who left on Friday morning to begin her journey to the north.

Addresses of commendation and encouragement were given by Rev. D. Hutchinson, pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church, and by Rev. Joseph V. Milligan, state superintendent of Presbyterian Sunday schools, and Mrs. Milligan. In behalf of these women of the congregation, Rev. J. C. Snyder, pastor of the church, presented Miss Bourhill with a useful leather handbag, and the superintendent of the Sunday school, in behalf of the attendants, with a reference Bible.

What Lincoln Thought

After the death of Ann Rutledge, every time it would rain, blow or snow, Abraham Lincoln would walk the floor and say:

"I can't bear to think of Ann out there in this storm and rain without any shelter, her grave filling with water," etc.

If a man as hig as Lincoln, whose mind and heart were so much in accord with the sufferings of humanity, whose sympathy reached all limits and endured all things for the good of his countrymen, whose love of country and home made him a martyr of martyrs—if he could not endure the thought of one he dearly loved, being buried in a common grave, exposed to the winds, the rains and the snows, if Abraham Lincoln, not enthusiastically religious, yet in no sense a materialist, must walk the floor at the thought of a loved one laid away in a hole in the earth, how must the same thought come home to the thousands of men and women who believe with Lincoln, or who would believe with him on matters of Truly Lincoln did so believe. He so expressed himself, and the bigger the man, the larger the experience, the kindlier the heart, the more certain it is that the grave, and likewise cremation, will be to him the source of regret, distress and intense grief, when even necessity provides no other means of disposing of the dead.

Nothing can be truer, no matter how men may think or talk about human burial, and nothing could be more certain than that the burial of Ann Rutledge in the earth was the cause of a great grief to the martyred President.

Is there any question as to whether Lincoln would have tolerated cremation, endured earth burial, or indorsed and secured Mausoleum interment for Ann Rutledge, and for the members of his own family, had he not won the distinction which made it a pleasure for his own state to provide tombs for them?

Could Lincoln, after all, have been so different from other men in this respect? Standing in the presence of such an affliction as did he, brings forcibly to mind what one should do to be prepared for the uncertainties of life, and that means a wise provision on the part of every head of a family when he least needs a place for interment, in order that it may be ready when anyone dependent upon him may most need it.

No tombs will be provided for those who do not subscribe for them in Riverview Abbey. That means, no one can be sure of space in this great Mausoleum unless they record themselves among the subscribers.

hazards in Oregon. A. P. Sprague, president of the association, in his annual address called attention to the fact Oregon now could be counted in the front rank of those states where fire protection is well in hand. He also referred to the benefits experienced from the passage two years ago of the forest fire law, and urged upon every timber owner in Oregon to use every precaution in protecting his property so that the greatest benefit would result to the state from its standing timber.

C. S. Chapman, secretary and manager of the association, reviewed the work of the organization for the past year. He said that private owners each year were increasing their efforts to maintain an efficient system of fire protection. Other speakers were: F. A. Elliott, State Forester; D. L. McKay, who represents extensive holdings in Eastern Oregon, J. H. Haak and C. G. Briggs, of Portland. About 20 representative timber owners from various parts of the state were present.
