Lewis Harcourt May Become Great Britain's War Minister as One of Results of Ulster Troubles—Admiral Winslow Raises Flag as Head of New Emergency Fleet—Cabrera Mentioned as Possible Mexican Choice.

Crown Prince George of Saxony

George W. Perkins

Admiral Winslow

Lewis Harcourt may be Great Britain's new War Minister. The Ulster trouble, resulting from the efforts of the Home Rulers in Ireland, has made many shakings in the person of the British ministry, and the political prospects say that Harcourt's appointment will be the latest turn.

Crown Prince George, of Saxony, came of age in January. He is now 16. He is announced that he will probably marry Tatiana, the daughter of the Czar of Russia. The Crown Prince's mother was the unfortunate Princess Louisa, of Prussia, who ran away with a music teacher, and whom the King of Saxony divorced. Prince George has two brothers and three sisters.

A distinguished Caralist arrived in New York this week. He came from Spain where he has been for some time. He is said to have been one of the leaders of the Constitutional party in Spain. George W. Perkins has been dubbed the "weeping noble" of the Progressive party. Amos Pinchot has just launched an attack against Perkins, and his continued dominance of the Progressives in New York State, holding out of sympathy with the principles and purposes of the party. He charges Perkins with suppressing a plank in the Progressive platform, and pamphlets as party literature which were intended primarily to exploit himself. In one of these Perkins was described as listening to the reading of Beveridge's speech in advance of the Chicago convention, while tears coursed down his cheeks.

Harry Payne Whitney, at Wheatley Hills, entertained the whole country-side at a race meet. Every year Mr. Whitney throws open his estate to all his neighbors for an amateur race meeting, after the fashion of the English.

Admiral Cameron Mott Winslow raised his flag as Admiral of the emergency fleet recently organized. The "New York" sailed from New York in a driving rain.

BY SARAH A. EVANS, President State Federation of Women's Clubs.

IT WOULD BE interesting to know how many of the thousands who attended the recent convention of the general federation at Chicago realized the work it entailed; how many gave a grateful thought to the army of women who labored for two years to fulfill the promise of Illinois "that this should be the greatest biennial ever held." Few, we would venture to say, who are attending conventions as we are, were prone to reply to an injunction of St. Paul, "eating what is set before us, asking no questions." But it is only fair to remember they cost time, energy and money.

For more than a year the local committees of Chicago met almost daily, maintaining headquarters and sending out bulletins as the work progressed.

While the Chicago women declare that their size their convention was the cheapest ever held, it cost $17,000. The clubs of the state contributed about three-fourths of the cost. The rest was subscribed through the activities of the Chicago Association of Commerce.

COST OF GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS DECLARED $17,000

Portland's Invitation for Council Meeting in 1915 Declared "Hit" and With Special Train Excursion for Club Women to San Francisco Little Doubt Is Felt as to Its Acceptance.

It would be interesting to know how many of the thousands who attended the recent convention of the general federation at Chicago realized the work it entailed; how many gave a grateful thought to the army of women who labored for two years to fulfill the promise of Illinois "that this should be the greatest biennial ever held." Few, we would venture to say, who are attending conventions as we are, were prone to reply to an injunction of St. Paul, "eating what is set before us, asking no questions." But it is only fair to remember they cost time, energy and money.

For more than a year the local committees of Chicago met almost daily, maintaining headquarters and sending out bulletins as the work progressed.

While the Chicago women declare that their size their convention was the cheapest ever held, it cost $17,000. The clubs of the state contributed about three-fourths of the cost. The rest was subscribed through the activities of the Chicago Association of Commerce.

The largest expense was for the Auditorium, for which the committee paid $6000 for the ten days. The cost of the music was $200, and of printing $1000. The cost of the "sociological pilgrimage," in which 1000 women participated, cost $400.

At the board meeting on Monday morning, following the closing of the convention, the board presented Mrs. George Bass, chairman of the local board, with an exquisite diamond brooch. Perhaps it was "like women," but everyone wept at the presentation.

The little white and blue badge bearing the words "Portland, Oregon, 1915" were very popular at the Chicago convention, and news has been received from many sources that the invitation extended to the general federation to hold its 1915 council meeting at Portland was enthusiastically received by the convention.

New York and Atlantic City extended invitations for the next biennial convention, in 1916, and Indianapolis was the only rival Portland had for this council meeting. The invitations were not considered until the board met early in September, but the Chicago Tribune predicts that Portland will be chosen for the biennial convention.

One of the great railroads is also lending its strength and influence to bring Portland to the attention of the general council meeting. It is a friend not to be despised.

The Chicago & Northwestern has already a definitely arranged plan to send a "clubwoman" special to the Panama-Pacific Exposition. The prospect given out at Chicago indicates that it will be one of the best equipped and most luxurious trains ever sent across the continent.

The original plan was to take it over the southern route, leaving Portland out of its itinerary, but a consultation between the railroad officials and the officers of the Oregon federation will undoubtedly result in being routed via Portland for the council meeting.

On June 15 a Denver paper, with startling headlines, made the following announcement: "Little Sarah Platt Decker Martin came to town yesterday afternoon. The dog found her being routed up her residence at over the next state convention, which will be held at Eugene in October. It was decided to follow the plan inaugurated at Hood River last year, and hold the "courtesy session" Monday evening, October 15, opening the convention for business Tuesday morning, and continuing until Thursday afternoon. On Monday evening the greetings will be extended from the hostess club; the city and other business men's night; but this was reconsidered at the last meeting, and a half day will be set aside for this feature of the convention.

The individual club reports is one of the most important matters that comes before the convention and it is strictly federation business. It was therefore felt that many visitors would attend the evening meetings, and would, and it was hardly fair to ask them to be patient through a long business meeting.

Those in attendance at the board meeting were Mrs. H. P. Davidson, recording secretary; Hood River, Miss Mattie, director; Salem, Mrs. C. N. Rankin, treasurer; Mrs. Abbie Orr-Dunbar, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. Sarah A. Evans, president, of Portland.

It was reported that 19 new clubs had affiliated with the state federation since the annual meeting last October. The two which are joined since last reported are the Political Science and the Bay View Reading Club, both of Portland.
