

OREGON'S CLAIM TO PRET IS SET FORTH

State Has Noteworthy Part in Ceremonies in Honor of Joaquin Miller.

TRIBUTE PAID TO GENIUS

Exposition Crowds Say Farewell to Liberty Bell and President Moore

Proposes Toast to Animate Spirit It Typifies.

BY ANNE SHANNON MONROE. OREGON EXPOSITION BUILDING, San Francisco, Nov. 11.—Tuesday was Joaquin Miller day and also the last day of the Liberty Bell's stay, with special ceremonies marking its farewell.

The Joaquin Miller ceremonies were held in Festival hall, where a large crowd gathered. Commissioner Logan represented Oregon on the program, as Oregon is one of the three states that claim the poet of the Sierras, Indiana having given him birth, Oregon his early Western experiences and California his later days of poetic triumph.

Indiana and California speakers reviewed the life of the poet as it touched their own states, but I really think Commissioner Logan made out the best case for Oregon's claim. He reviewed the history of Joaquin Miller from the time he came west over the Oregon trail, the first trail blazed westward toward the setting sun, in 1839, when the territory was still a frontier territory. Mr. Logan said, among other things:

Joaquin Miller lived among our tall pines near where rolls the Oregon and here the genesis of genius was written into his life. He ran away from his home in Indiana at the age of seven and kept running all his life; and he ran to Oregon, and then to Eastern Oregon, where he became a pony express driver, later he studied law, and then became an editor. During the Civil War his paper was suppressed for advocating peace.

He came to Portland and wrote there his first book, "Specimens," the next wrote "Joaquin and Others," and in derision was called Joaquin; the name stuck. He then went to San Francisco, but never did he recognize his greatness at once; it remained for England to put the laurel wreath on the poet of the Sierras, before we who loved him also sensed his greatness. He returned to Portland in 1905 where Harvey Scott received him royally, and here he received as well the homage of all the state, due the boy who was forever running away and had once more run away to Oregon. Oregon joins California in honoring one of the great geniuses of the Western coast, who will be honored as one of the great geniuses of our world.

Thousands Bid Bell Farewell. All the time outside the Liberty Bell, sitting enthroned before the Tower of Jewels, was being passed in review by thousands who had come for a last look. There were speeches and good wishes, and there were waving handkerchiefs and wet eyes; and there were carloads of people, bearing bouquets of chrysanthemums; every state and nation had sent a floral tribute, till the old bell, with its bearing of a beautiful history, was being borne away to the new moon, clear-cut and strong in its young beauty. As the Liberty Bell in a ark without a cloud. A good mood, some way. The crowds, still standing before the beloved relic, the men who bared heads, the women silent and awed, seemed taking part in some old sacrificial rite. It was a holy time.

On Wednesday at 10 a large crowd gathered the full length of the parade route in the grounds for a last sight of the bell and to view the parade. It was a magnificent outpouring of strong, handsome, uniformed men of steel bayonets, of shining brass. The bands played stirring martial airs and every one hummed or kept step and said how well the music of Canada was to the navy, the artillery, even the mules and the supply wagons seemed alive and alert.

As I came back to the inn I passed a woman seated in a small recess of the veranda crying bitterly; I stopped and then moved on. I had met her at breakfast—a Canadian woman who had had to come away from Canada to try to forget. She had told me that every mother in her part of Canada may weep at least one boy in the war and some of them six.

I don't know how many she had lost—she couldn't talk any more about it. I just left her crying—it seems all a woman can do—but some way the spring went out of my step and I dragged my feet heavily on my way to write about the gorgeous military parade of handsome men.

POPE URGED TO FREE Rome Hears of Scheme of Central Empires.

CRUISER ONCE WAITING British, Belgian and Russian Ministers Turn Scale With Assurances That Italy Will Give Complete Guarantees.

ROME, Nov. 12.—(Special.)—Particulars are now available of a plan said to have been made by the Austrian Ambassador accredited to the Holy See, Prince Schoenberg Hartenstein, last May, to induce the Pope to leave Rome. It is known that the Italian government denounced the triple alliance, the Kaiser and the Emperor of Austria confidentially informed Alfonso of Spain, that war between Italy and Austria was inevitable and that as the Pope might be in danger in Rome when war was declared and the law of guarantees suspended, they suggested Spain, as the only Catholic neutral European power, should offer hospitality to the Pontiff.

As I came back to the inn I passed a woman seated in a small recess of the veranda crying bitterly; I stopped and then moved on. I had met her at breakfast—a Canadian woman who had had to come away from Canada to try to forget. She had told me that every mother in her part of Canada may weep at least one boy in the war and some of them six.

Eleventh-Hour Effort Made. This happened about the beginning of May. The departure of the Pope from Rome would have created an unfavorable impression against Italy throughout the Catholic world, and possibly would have caused serious dissensions in Italy.
