LOCAL HAPPENINGS.

M. O. Wilkins is attending circuit court at Dallas this week.

Irving Burg returned Sunday from a brief business trip to Eugene.

Miss Lillian Hamilton returned yesterday from a short visit at Eugene.

Jessie Tunniff is in Portland on business for the electric light company.

Father Brody, of McMinnville, visited in Corvallis Monday and Tuesday of this week.

If you want a good fitting pair of trousers, suit or overcoat, go to Cecil the Tailor.

A typewriter in first-class condition, will sell for half price. Apply at this office.

A. L. McFadden left Monday for Toledo on legal business and expects to return today.

A marriage license was issued Tuesday to Edmund Zeiss, of Albany, and Miss Dora Bell, of this county.

Union services will be held next Sunday evening at the Presbyterian church and at the old college chapel.

Fred Blumhardt returned Monday from a several weeks' visit with relatives in Philadelphia and other eastern cities.

S. L. Kline returned Tuesday from an extended visit with his family who are spending the winter in San Francisco.

Wm. Bray and wife left Monday for Gladstone Park, near Oregon City, where they expect to remain during the winter.

The Woodmen's circle auxiliary to Marys Peak Camp will meet Friday evening at 7:30 for the purpose of electing officers.

The Misses Hennion, of Portland, returned home Saturday, having spent several days in Corvallis, the guests of Miss Mattie Avery.

Mrs. J. Mason and sister, Mrs. C. G. Copeland of Toledo, took the "Sunset Limited" Tuesday for a two weeks stay in San Francisco.

Mrs. F. L. Miller, State Inspector of the Women's Relief Corps, returned from Eugene Monday having during her absence inspected the corps of that city.

Miss Ora Spangler spent Thanksgiving with her parents in this city. Saturday she returned to Oregon City to resume her duties in the public schools of that city.

J. M. Porter left for Portland Tuesday noon on business. He expects to return today. During Mr. Porter's absence, Geo. F. Eglin is clothed with the judicial garb of the police judge.

Bob Ray returned Tuesday to Woodburn where he is employed in his father's store. Bob's frequent visits to Corvallis are said to be for the purpose of filling pressing business engagements.

"Rock" Bryson, Eugene's plucky quarter-back and his brother Ed spent Friday and Saturday with their parents in Corvallis. They returned Sunday to resume their studies at the University.

Deputy Prosecuting Attorney Wilson was seen at a drug store Monday enquiring about the cost of Castoria, soothing syrup and other nostrums for infants. It was an eight-pound boy, and came that morning.

The president's message discussed all sorts of matters and contained numerous recommendations in regard to our foreign relations but overlooked one important matter—Spencer's shaves, hair-cuts and baths.

Mrs. Chas. Pearce left on the last Yaguina steamer to join her husband who is in San Francisco in the employ of the Alaska Commercial company. She was accompanied by her son Harry and expects to be absent several weeks.

The report that John Long had been shanghaied or foully dealt with turns out canard. A letter received by his wife Tuesday states that he is in Washington negotiating for the purchase of a quantity of shingles and would return home as soon as the deal was consummated.

Two members of the Philomath literary society had a "scrap" the other day, so 'tis said, over $1.75 the balance remaining in the society's exchequer. Both were arrested and together contributed $15 towards defraying the expense of Philomath's city government.

Nolan & Callahan say that times are perceptibly improved. Their business for the month of November showed an increase of 20 per cent. over that of the corresponding month last year and prospects for the holiday trade, according to most of the merchants, are really flattering.

E. Berlin left Corvallis last Friday for California, where he will spend the winter. Mr. Berlin is a very successful fruit-grower and during his absence will undertake the introduction in California of the Oregon Rebering strawberry which has been profitably grown by Mr. Berlin in Corvallis for several years.

On the evening of the 27th of November, at the residence of the bride's parents, Miss Lilly Kerr and Mr. Frank Bowersox, were united in marriage. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Bowersox, of Salem, the groom's father. Mr. and Mrs. Bowersox are making their home on a farm about nine miles south-east of this city.

On Saturday afternoon, December 14th, the Ladies Guild of the Episcopal church, will conduct a fancy linen sale at the Lyford residence. A large number of elegant pieces of drawn work will be on exhibition. Coffee and cake will be served at ten cents. The public is invited to call and inspect the display and partake of the refreshments.

Miss Mary Cundiff, of Albany, will give one of her pleasing elocutionary entertainments at the Opera house on Saturday evening, December 14th, under the auspices of the ladies of the order of Maccabees. Other features of the entertainment will be vocal and instrumental music, and the Grecian drill by twelve young ladies. Full program later.

The Willamette is once more at a boating stage and river navigation has been resumed. The steamers Elmore and Eugene both arrived up the river the first of the week and will each make semi-weekly trip to this point as long as the river remains at a floating stage. The O. R. & N. Co.'s new steamer Gypsy will ply on the upper river as far as Eugene.

Union services were held at the Congregational church Sunday evening participated in by the congregations of the Evangelical, Presbyterian and Congregational churches. Rev. Zercher led the service and Dr. E. J. Thompson preached a very earnest and eloquent sermon. Two selections were sung by the Bach quartette and other music was rendered by a chorus of forty voices under the leadership of Rev. Zercher.

Manager Edwin Stone is back from San Francisco where he has been for several weeks looking after business interest of the O. C. & E. He says his company is still holding its own but if the rate war between the O. R. & N. and the Southern Pacific companies continues much longer, as it is likely to, the result will seriously affect the O. C. & E. Mr. Stone was accompanied by his wife who will remain here several days.

Geo. U. Piper, of the Oregonian's reportorial staff, made one of his occasional pilgrimages to Corvallis last week and worshipped at the shrine of Venus. While on his way to the home of the object of his affections he met with an unpleasant experience and lost his way in the streets. After enquiring of a half-dozen policemen, and wading knee-deep in mud, he finally reached his destination in the neighborhood of Mary's river bridge.

The Noname dancing club held their first session last Friday night. It was one of the most pleasant parties ever given in the city. The "ancients" attended in force, and their elasticity and merriment won the envy of the sprigs and buds. Many from a distance attended, and among them were: Misses Hennion, Mr. Geo. U. Piper and Chas. Piper, of Portland; Miss Ora Spangler, of Oregon City; Messrs Quinn and Brown, of Albany.

Last Thursday evening a number of Corvallisites attended a ball at Independence, which was given under the auspices of Rebeckah lodge of that city. The affair was both a social and a financial success, the total receipts being $270. The ball was given in the new G. A. R. building, recently built for the state G. A. R. encampment to be held in Independence next spring. Those who attended from this city were Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Whitcomb, Mr. and Mrs. Ned Smith and Mrs. Belle Cosper.

An admirable Thanksgiving program was rendered at the public school last Wednesday evening. The exercises were held in Prof. Pratt's room, which was prettily decorated with evergreens and patriotic colors. Dr. Thompson and Frank Abram Powell made short, interesting speeches. The program of the pupils was an excellent one and reflected special credit upon their instructor. Corvallis may well be proud of her public school, with its corps of intelligent and faithful instructors.

Mr. A. W. Rose leaves shortly for St. Louis, for the purpose of disposing of a large quantity of dried prunes, the product of the orchard of his brother, D. C. Rose. Prune growers will watch with interest the result of Mr. Rose's trip. He will not have a car load of the fruit, hence his freight rate will be $2 per hundred pounds. Could he take a car load the rate would be $1.20 per hundred. Mr. Rose has an extensive acquaintance with the business men of St. Louis, and thinks he will be able to secure good results.

Corvallis will very probably have another big football game this month or next. An aggregation of Stanford university students, including the football team, the glee club, the mandolin and guitar club, the dramatic association and camp followers, are coming north after the December examination. Active efforts are being made to have the aggregation visit Corvallis, show our boys how to play football, and give an entertainment in the evening. This will mean the bringing of a big crowd to Corvallis, for it will be more fun than any circus, and everybody will want to see this picture of "beauty and the beast"—California music and football.

WHISKEY AND PISTOLS.

Corvallis Policemen Thirst for Blood, and Go Gunning.

The spirit of the "wild and woolly west" as the effete east considers it, manifested itself in Corvallis Saturday night. The principle actors were the police force of the city, the sheriff of Benton county, several members of the Smith-Lieb company, a justice of the peace, two councilmen and several citizens. Whiskey was also mixed up in the matter to a considerable extent and revolvers figured quite freely.

To begin at the beginning the Smith-Lieb company was giving a most excellent entertainment at the opera house that evening. Some of the boys in the gallery were disturbing the house and Mr. Babson, manager of the troupe, requested Chief of the Police Taylor and Nightwatchman McLagan to stop it, but they failed to do it. Shortly afterward Mr. Babson requested the officers themselves to keep quiet as they were seriously annoying the audience by talking. According to one of the others McLagan asked Babson if he knew who they were. Babson replied that he did, but it made no difference, it was a duty they owed the players as well as the audience to keep quiet and that they must do so or leave the house. McLagan then left but soon returned. Mr. Babson and James Horning were standing in the hallway and both state that after a few words with Horning, McLagan suddenly and without warning or provocation, struck Babson a severe blow in the face. This indignity he resented by falling the night watchman to the ground with a cane. Horning caught him as he fell and sent in Chief Taylor thinking that he might persuade McLagan, who was in an angry humor, to go to bed and sober up. Whatever Taylor advised him then McLagan determined upon taking personal revenge. He went down to the hotel and announced to several that he intended shooting Babson on sight and exhibited a formidable revolver. Several friends tried to pacify him but their efforts were useless. He was evidently strongly under the influence of liquor and would listen to neither persuasion, reason nor threats.

At the closing of the performance word was sent to Mr. Babson that his life was in danger should he venture on the street. McLagan and Taylor got together again and were soon joined by two members of the company, Messrs. Tjader and Scott. Taylor, if anything, was more intoxicated than McLagan and encouraged him in his determination to take the life of Babson. The four started up the street toward Mary's river, bridge and the conversation that ensued was related by Mr. Tjader as follows.

Mr. Scott (good naturedly).—"Now, 'Mac,' pull yourself together, be reasonable and brags up."

McLagan.—"Well, the d—d cuss didn't treat me right and I want to get even."

Tjader (with one eye on "Mac's" pistol pointed at the other on Taylor's revolver).—"Now, chief, we are good friends, aren't we, old man? Let's go back and drink to 'sunny skies.'"

Taylor (with tottering dignity).—"Dam 'sunny skies!' Say, 'Mac,' (hic) I'm the biggest taxpayer in 'ish town, (hic) ain't I?"

McLagan.—"Yes."

Taylor.—"You—of a—insulted me, didn't he, an' I'm the chief of police? They tried to down me last spring, didn't they? I'll show 'em who I am. 'Sulled me, didn't he?"

McLagan.—"Yes, and I resulted the insult to my chief."

Taylor.—"Hic) That's right 'Mac.' Then he hit you with a club. I'd kill the—of a—"

Tjader, however, induced them to defer the killing long enough to drink a health to 'sunny skies.'

In the meantime Mr. Babson and several of his company, unwilling to engage in a pistol encounter with the whole police force of Corvallis, remained barricaded in the opera house. Sheriff O'Leary was notified that the police force was running riot in town and that his services were required as a body guard for Mr. Babson from the hall to the hotel. He took him down safely and then in company with Justice Holgate and several citizens went to look after the police department. Councilmen Flett and Leo had meanwhile been sent for and did their best to quell the disturbance. McLagan and Taylor were found at "Our House," and McLagan finally promised to drop the matter if the justice would let him swear out a warrant for Babson's arrest. Justice Holgate, to pacify him, consented. It was about 2 o'clock Sunday morning when the justice took Taylor and McLagan to the court house, but not having his keys he was unable to get in. Holgate then went to his office, over the First National bank, to get out the papers, the police force agreeing to await his return. After writing out the complaint Holgate again appeared at the court house but the police had evidently forgotten their agreement, and instead of meeting at the court house they came down town. They then went through the Corvallis and Occidental hotels against the protest of the proprietors looking for Mr. Babson, but failed to discover his room. Mr. Babson having been assigned a different room from the one given him on the register.

Justice Holgate came down town to look for them and stepped into "Our House." Just as he was enquiring for them Taylor came in the squire, "You are trying to sneak out of your responsibility. I'll pull your nose. I'll break your back. He grabbed Holgate by the throat, but just then George Avery seized Taylor, who pulled out his revolver. James Horning who, hearing the rumpus, came in about this time and attempted to quiet Taylor, but Taylor pulled the gun up into Horning's face and cocked it, remarking that he was the chief of police and what he said went. After some more words he put up his revolver. McLagan then came in and seemed to be getting over his excitement. He signed the complaint and the squire went to bed.

Taylor and McLagan then imagining that their revenge was complete proceeded to have a gay time, under the encouragement of some members of the company, who were desirous of rendering them absolutely harmless. They got plenty of liquor into them and their pistols all went to bed and all was serene.

It must not be inferred from this occurrence that "Our House" is a disorderly place, or that Adam Assell, Mr. Wensdelfield's bartender; was a willing party to this late session. He, in common with the other citizens who were trying to subdue the policemen, wanted to keep them off the streets. Assell also during the evening looked into the muzzle of Taylor's big gun.

Taylor and McLagan claim that Babson insulted them, and that he struck McLagan without provocation. They offer no excuses for their conduct afterwards, but say that, laboring under their excitement, they became intoxicated before they knew it, and have no recollections of their actions.

The company was composed of ladies and gentlemen, and made a favorable impression on our citizens personally as well as artistically. Mr. Babson proved an affable, genial gentleman, and was not at fault in any particular in this disgraceful matter. The citizens of Corvallis, without exception, deplore the event that will necessarily stain the fair name of our city. Members of the company went to Albany Sunday morning by private conveyance, carrying away, probably, no anxious desires for an early return to this city. No warrant was served on Mr. Babson. Justice Holgate said that neither McLagan nor Taylor was in a fit mental condition to make proper complaint. He allowed them to swear to an information simply to quiet them.

Several business men have been interviewed by a Gazette man in regard to the matter, and they are unanimous in saying it is a most unfortunate occurrence. The fact that the city was without any police protection, whatever, all Saturday night, was seriously commented upon. Each man seemed to feel a personal shame, that a respectable stranger should have to appeal to the sheriff for protection of his life against the entire police force of the city. This expression is unanimous that both Taylor and McLagan should be speedily removed. The offense is one that cannot be condoned, or overlooked.

The amendment to the act incorporating the city of Corvallis, enacted at the last legislature, provides in section 5, "That any officer of the city of Corvallis may be removed for misfeasance or inattention or incapacity in office, upon a two-third vote of the council, provided further that any of the said officers shall before being removed have charges preferred against them in writing by a legal voter, the officers to have a copy thereof certified to by the police judge at least ten days before the action by the council particularizing in what the misfeasance, inattention or incapacity consists."

The night watchman, however, may be removed at any time, by simply the election and qualification of a successor. The section above quoted would therefore apply only in the case of Taylor.

THE SMITH-LIEB COMPANY.

Probably the largest and most representative audiences, that have greeted any theatrical combination this season, witnessed the presentation by the Smith-Lieb company of the splendid productions, "Arabian Nights" and "Infatuation," Thursday and Saturday evenings of last week.

The story of the comedy "Arabian Nights" is not only ludicrous and mirth-provoking but has real dramatic strength. The complications and absurd situations of the play keep one grinning and laughing in most undignified fashion from rise of the curtain to its final fall. Mr. Carl Smith, as Arthur Hummingtop, is such an artistic and fascinating trifle with truth that one cannot avoid sharing his uneasiness as to the outcome of his troubles. It is quite impossible to keep track of all his extraordinary falsehoods. His fall began in a harmless little flirtation with Rosa Colombar, "The Gutta Percha Girl," and from that moment he is wound tighter and tighter in the net of fabrication, until his position becomes so pitiful, that even his mother-in-law is moved to assist him to extricate himself. Miss Lieb is an ideal actress, and can do as she lists with her audience. Her rendering of Rosa Colombar, in "Arabian Nights," and Ollie Somerville, in "Infatuation," were gems of splendid impersonation.

Joshua has a clever impersonator in the person of Mr. Fred Tjader, who plays an exaggerated part with the proper touch of burlesque, and without the horseplay and obtrusiveness so often associated with these characters.

The work of Messrs Nelson and Scott is excellent, and Miss Hattie Foley deserves a word of recognition for her clever impersonations. The entire company is made up of players of unusual merit, and the excellent rendering of their productions leaves no loophole for complaint.

T. B. Hennessy, manager of the Embalmers' Supply Company of New York, was in Corvallis this week. He had heard, while in Portland, of S. N. Wilkins, and at once made up his mind that Newt was the sort of a person with whom he ought to do business, and his visit to Corvallis was by no means a disappointment.

Mr. Hennessy says that embalming is regarded as a science in many states, and that laws have been enacted to regulate the business. These laws, he said, were similar to the one in this state regulating the practice of medicine. Persons desiring to follow the business of embalming are required to first pass a satisfactory examination before a competent board of examiners and are then granted a license. Mr. Hennessy believes that such a law ought to be enacted in this state as a safeguard against the spread of contagious diseases.

Dr. Sayer's Remedy.

Transcript attempts to come as near getting all the "coop" possible, but during the last few days it has got "cooped" in first-class shape by a company of barnstormers out representing the O. W. R. Co. of Portland. The manager of the Congo Oil Co. named E. Wilson, contracted with us for dates and advertising to the amount of $3, and with a great deal of gusto informed us that he would be here all this week, would want more printing done and would pay the bill all in a lump. He knew he was lying all the time. Sometime between 12 o'clock and morning Sunday he skipped the town with all his company and effects save Lud Carberry, and his pianist, who he left with salaries due. And the Transcript is not only loser by the thieving escapade. They roomed at Mrs. Rennie's, and the lady is out the bill due her. We are not kicking, but are in the best of humor, and all we have got to say is that if the Oregon Wonderful Remedy company's medicine is as treacherous as the manager they sent to this place, they may as well accept all orders at once. Next—Transcript.
