

THE OREGON SENTINEL

HOW HATH THE MIGHTY FALLEN!

Shades of Hector, Achilles, Agamemnon, Julius Caesar and Bombastes Furioso! In the dark grottoes of Hades sit down and cover your ghostly mugs with your shadowy mantles! Bones of the Huguenots! Battle in your mouldy sarcophagi!

Graves of the Cavaliers! Heaven! Ferment! and shoot forth pestilential crops of dog fennel and Jimson weeds! Howl ye Southern breezes! and let the palm-tree groves mourn "Ichabod! Ichabod!" for the glory hath departed from these "horn to command," and the "superior race's" bung is extracted! No more upon his throne of skulls sits Cotton the King; nor longer prates of empire. Bombastes Lee, and Peter Tantant, and all the thousand doubtful giants of Rebellion's Iliad, have beaten their swords into stirrup irons and their spears into axel trees, and the clouds of dust obscure the cent-tails of the rear guard of the Grand Army. The Presidential chair of the Southern Confederacy is filled by a bigger reporter of the Philadelphia Press, and free niggers sun themselves on the steps of the Senate House at Richmond.

An ugly, one-eyed, toothless hog, with petticoats high raised, and long-legged boots indecently exposed, flies through a rice patch in Georgia; pursued by Yankee ragamuffin cavalry, and miring down, surrenders petticoats and boots and bowie-knife—everything. The hog is the Confederacy. The gender thereof is hogs. The pangs and joys of maternity never thrilled through that horrid form, and no sucking cavalier was ever nourished at that withered breast. Bogus representative of a bogus government! Those robes of femininity enfold the form of what was once a man, and, being rudely stripped aside, Jeff Davis stands confessed in all his charms? To this complexion has he come at last! Och-hone! Och-hone! Jeff Davis! Dreams of power, and glory, and grandeur, faded from that brain long, long ago; and later visions of sumptuous retirement, on stolen gold, in some "sequestered spot," are lost and scattered in the jungle. Jeff Davis rides to Washington at last. Not in triumphal car, with loud clarions in frost, and chained captive in the rear; nor yet mounted on a milk-white steed, o'er pathway strown with garlands, and welcome, ed by the sweet songs of maidens. Not much. Jefferson Dill Tattered and torn garments of "Confederate Gray" half hide the shrunken form of the wretch, who, with gyres upon his wrists, wends his way to the prison of the traitor—perchance the gibbet of the felon. Oh! but

The mills of the Gods grind slowly. But they grind exceedingly small.

THE TRUE FRIENDS.—It is to be observed that the party which was so earnest in urging the war, so long as the resistance of the rebels made the war necessary, is now most disposed toward peace. Now that peace seems to be gained through the only means that could consist with national honor, the "Democracy" who had been crying for "peace" when they well knew that peace could not be had unless concession should be made to the rebels of what they demanded, have suddenly lost the power of utterance and invoke peace no longer.

The peace that is now coming is not at all on the conditions which these precious patriots hoped for. Hence their sudden reticence. They have all along favored peace when they supposed it would be to the interest of the rebels for them to do so. There have been a great many examples of the mode they would have adopted to bring peace to the country. The "peace" proclivities of Fernando Wood were made manifest when he wrote his letter to a rebel Governor regretting that he could not send arms to his State to assist in destroying the government. Harris of Maryland has been a violent advocate of "peace" ever since it became apparent that the rebels were getting punished for their misdeeds. Late his propensity for peace took a new direction, and he was found advising rebel prisoners to violate their parole, go South and take up arms again. For thus advocating peace he was arrested and thrown into prison, where he still remains, confined "merely on account of his opinions." Many "Democrats" who a short time ago were "peace" shrillers are now strong war men; that is to say, they anxiously hope that the rebels will be able to continue the contest sometime longer. These "Democrats" crafty and artful men, never desired peace unless the rebels should profit by it. The true peace men are those who have fought this conflict through, and who would have peace only on terms consistent with the integrity of the Government and with future safety. All who called for peace on any other terms than the demolition of the rebel power, were mere pretenders and false men.—Oregonian May 23d.

PRINCIPLES OF MIND AND THE LACK OF THEM.—The Pittsburgh (Pa.) Gazette of May 6th has the following:

A man named Fay, who was at work repairing a railroad bridge between Fort Carbon and St. Clair, Schenckville county, met with a sad accident last Saturday. While at work he perceived two trains coming in opposite directions. He immediately stepped down through the trestle work of the bridge, but seems to have lost his presence of mind and clapped both arms around one of the rails. The "wheel" of one train cut off one of his hands at the wrist, and on the other side his arm near the shoulder. He dropped into the water below, from which he was soon taken and his wounds properly dressed. He is now doing as well as could be expected from the nature of his injuries.

It is announced that John C. Heenan, the pugilist, has married an English lassie and settled down.
