LOVE SICK SWAIN ATTEMPTED SUICIDE

James Childers, a farm-hand who has recently been visiting friends in Melrose, attempted to end his life Saturday evening because a young lady of Melrose, with whom he was in love refused to marry him. Childers took a dose of laudanum and lay down in the brush to die, leaving a note to the young lady saying he would rather die than live without her. When the note was discovered a search was instituted for Childers, and he was found, and by vigorous walking and rubbing he was brought back to life, but when his rescuers became tired he again fell asleep. The authorities were notified and Deputy Sheriff Bogard started to Melrose Sunday morning and met Childers a few miles out of town bound for Roseburg. He stated he was ashamed of his attempt to take his own life, and was sure that he could live without his young lady love. He left Sunday evening for California.
