ALL RECORDS ARE BROKEN

Oregon Immigration this Summer Is the Heaviest Ever Known.

IS ESTIMATED AT 50,000

Men Came As Result of Free Fare Offered By Hill Railroads.

Portland, July 18.—What is believed to have been the greatest immigration of its kind into the Pacific Northwest has been accomplished by James J. Hill in bringing in workmen on the Portland & Seattle railway construction from St. Paul and the eastern centers.

This great movement has been accomplished by offering free fare to the Pacific coast. The object of course was to fill the construction camps along the Columbia, and the only reason that the Hill lines have kept the invitation standing and so many have been brought west is that the men desert after working a time, changing to some other line of industry.

Before the close of the season the management of the Portland & Seattle expects to be doing much better and to double practically the construction forces, for President Elliott of the Northern Pacific is quoted as saying that he expects to have 12,000 men employed on the work before long, when as much earth will be moved on the work as is being dug by the forces engaged on the Panama canal.

Pacific coast industries have felt the effect of this great army of men moved westward by the Hill forces for construction purposes. Probably there is not one of the great manufacturing interests in the Pacific Northwest that has not been helped by finding the labor market easier as the direct result of this great immigration.

Sawmills are better supplied than last year at this time, the railroad camps of all the companies have a large quota of men, and the harvest fields, which are now sending forth the annual Macedonian cry, are not likely to face the serious shortage of labor that has been the case in former seasons.

However, there is work in all lines for all who want to work, and wages were never so good. Railroad construction pays from $2.50 up for common labor; railroad maintenance work pays from $1.75 up; harvest hands get from $2 to $4 a day between Portland and Pendleton, while logging jobs are to be had right now at $2.75 to $3.50.
