NUMBER 47

SILETZ

Died, at her home in Siletz, January 7th, 1920, Mrs. Peter Kobolski, age 54 years, 3 months and 3 days. She is survived by her husband and eight children, four boys and four girls. The children were all present when she passed away except one son, who was in Vancouver, Washington. The children were all present at the funeral. Interment took place in River-view cemetery, that was established last spring as a burial place for the white people. The funeral was largely attended by the friends and neighbors of deceased. Services were held at the Catholic church at 11 a. m., conducted by Father Vollebregt, of Newport, Oregon. The seating capacity of the little church was over-taxed and some had to stand. To assist the Father in the service a choir was gathered together from members of the community. The services were very impressive. The priest spoke of the Christian character of deceased, her devotion and love for her children, her worth as a home builder, a good neighbor, a faithful and true companion to her husband, a useful member in a society, a tireless worker and one who practiced, as far as she could the teachings of the Great Master. Such a character is a great loss to any community, but her example will still survive and exert a good influence over others, long after she has passed away. The pupils of the public school nearly all attended the services in a body.

W. A. Petzold, Regional director of the Inter-church World movement of the American Indian survey of the Northwest area, embracing Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, Oregon and Washington, spent Sunday at Siletz having come over Saturday evening from Toledo. It was published among the Indians that he desired as many of them as possible to be at church Sunday as he had a special message to deliver that would be of interest to the redman. Mr. Petzold had spent sixteen years of his life as missionary among the Crow nation of Montana. He has a wide knowledge of Indian characteristics. He said the Crow Indians had an empire of their own and were rich. The allotment to each Indian is 160 acres of land, and they number 2500 all told. About 500 still wear blankets and are uncivilized. It is a great stock and farming country and the most of the Indians are doing well, live in fine homes and are good business men. They no longer deserve the name of being called lazy and shiftless, but thrifty and prosperous. Mr. Petzold held two services, at 11 o'clock and in the evening, and at both services the house was crowded to its full seating capacity. Rev. Walter Ross, pastor of the M. E. church here, introduced the speaker with some felicitous remarks. The sermon was able and impressive, especially directed for the good of the redman. After the services were over the Indians, men, women and children, were bunched up in front of the church and a picture was taken of them. Rev. and Mrs. Ross being missionaries were included in the picture. These photographs are to be published in the church magazines as a matter of information to all who are interested in missionary work among the Indians. The pictures are not taken for commercial purposes but will be printed at actual cost, at about ten cents apiece. The evening services were still better and the audience larger than before, especially with the Indian people. The choir singing was extra good. Charles Larsen helped out very much with his cornet. The sermon, was still more eloquent and broader, embracing the world movement of the churches for the spread of christianity to the remotest parts of the earth. This is a gigantic task, but it is being carried forward with zeal and determination. Mr. Petzold was well pleased with the progress the Siletz Indians have made in the arts of civilization and also with the kind, considerate treatment of the whites who live among them. He was also pleased with the beauty of the Siletz valley and the vast undeveloped resources that surround it. Mr. Petzold pleased the audience by singing a song in the Crow language. No one understood it but it sounded good. The song was composed by a Crow Indian and was of a religious character.

Dr. O. S. Phillips, Eye specialist from the Indian office is here and will examine and treat all the Indians who may have diseased and defective eyes. He also examines and fits glasses.

Dr. Burgess was over Tuesday to see Judge Gardner, who has been quite sick for several weeks. The Judge now owns the Orton store and lives there with his family. His health has been impaired for some time.

Mrs. Miller and daughter, Lena, were South Beach visitors last Sunday. The people of South Beach are considerable enthused over the prospect of a saw mill being brought in some time in the near future, for all realize the great help it would be to this country, as it is so hard to get lumber in here, and there is so much splendid saw timber available here that should be put on the market. A sawmill would be welcomed by a great many who have timber which they would like to dispose of. Frank Priest brought two men here a short time ago looking for a mill site and they were satisfied with the outlook if they could contrive to get the timber to the mill and thought they might lease the railroad for that purpose, and that would give them access to the great body of timber.

When they arrived on the scene Sunday morning they found that the scow had swamped during the night, and the donkey engine had slid off into about twenty feet of water. TRANSIT AND SCOW CARRIED OUT TO SEA

Last Friday evening the launch Transit took a scow load of slab wood from Elk City to Newport. While making arrangements to tie the scow to the wharf at Newport, the rope in some manner became foul of the launch's propeller, and the strong outgoing tide swept the launch and scow out toward the bar. The men on the boat blew their whistle for assistance.

Before the lifesaving crew could respond, Capt. Copeland had rescued them with his launch, "Fearless" but was unable to do anything with the Transit and its tow, they being swept out to sea. The night was a calm moonlight night, and the transit and scow rode out over the bar in the shape, and in the night the lifesaving crew went out in their power boat after the Transit, whose lights could be seen burning. The Transit was picked up about five miles southwest of the harbor entrance, and towed into port. It had broken loose from the scow and was riding the swells in great style. It was undamaged with the exception of a broken window.

The scow was too large for any of the local boats to handle in crossing the bar, and was of necessity, allowed to drift away. It was a large new scow, size 29 by 60 feet, and cost $1300 to build.

The Transit and scow are the property of Leland Wakefield and Herman Schmidt of Elk City.
